ANTITOXIN FOR LAZINESS

Kansas City Journal.
There is a disposition in some quarters to treat with careless frivolity the new antitoxin for laziness. A few days ago an ounce of this preparation was received in New York from Berlin, and under instructions of the discoverer, Dr. Wolfgang Weichardt, it was given a trial and the stimulative properties it developed were remarkable to a degree. Only the most pronounced and obstinate cases were selected for trial. The committee took a hypodermic needle and a vial of the antitoxin and sallied forth.

The first experiment was upon an obese policeman leaning against a building in somnolent oblivion of the passing throng. One quick injection and the policeman awoke himself, looked about with wide-open eyes, took a firm hold on his club and started upon his beat. He passed three saloons without going into one of them and stood within several feet of a peanut stand without exercising his traditional privilege of stuffing his pockets. He helped an old lady across a street, and ten minutes later he had arrested two confidence men. This case was so truly wonderful that it was determined to make even a more trying test. The committee hunted up a messenger boy and, after injecting the antitoxin into his arm, sent him around the block with a note. The boy started on a run and was back with an answer the same afternoon. A dose was given a plumber, and he took off a kitchen water tap and screwed another in its place and only charged for two hours' time. Apparently the preparation acts simply as a nerve tonic, causing the subject to exercise quick and alert physical and mental movements in the line of duty.

GOOD STORY SPOILED

Boston Globe.
The sensational story that the young king of Spain publicly slapped the face of one of the most distinguished of Spain's naval officers, Admiral Chacon, has certainly been adequately disproved. Senor Merino at Washington has shown Secretary Taft that not only was the king 200 miles away from Madrid at the time of the reported occurrence, but that Admiral Chacon has been dead four years.

$10,000 TO TOWN TAKING HIS NAME

Request of Former Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts Soon Open to Country.

Greenfield, Mass., May 12.—The town of Greenfield, W. H. Burbridge county, Iowa, makes a bid for the $10,000 left by Henry W. Cushman, lieutenant governor of Massachusetts half a century ago, which had been given to the town of not less than 1,000 inhabitants which shall "take and forever retain" the corporate name of Cushman. Whether Connecticut or the lucky town will not be known for five years.

Mr. Cushman provided that his native place in this state, Barnardston should have the first chance to assume his name and win the $10,000. If Barnardston failed to take advantage of the offer, the legacy was to be open to any town in Massachusetts, and the end of five years, no Massachusetts town assuming the name, the offer was open to any town in the United States. Barnardston after a general discussion of the matter, rejected the proposition by the vote of 103 to 5.

Mr. Cushman had lavished upon Barnardston most of his fortune, the amounts aggregating $80,000. The question whether the town should honor so bountiful a benefactor or preserve its ancient name and all its rich traditions was a delicate one to decide.

The name of Barnardston was given the town in honor of Sir Francis Barnard, provincial governor of Massachusetts, appointed by King George III. The act giving the name of Barnardston to the new plantation called Falltown was signed March 8, 1762, by Sir Francis himself.

Sir Francis was an unbending tory and a supporter of the authority of his royal master in the new world, and this fact had long been a source of mortification to the town, which had long been a tory people, who disliked to think of their town bearing the name of one who was hostile to the spirit of 1776.

But, after a long and bitter association from its tory source was too dear in associations and traditions to allow them to change it, even to honor so generous a benefactor as the late lieutenant governor.

The name of Cushman will always be associated with Barnardston. Material monuments of his history in the town are the library, Cushman hall, Cushman park and the pastor's residence of the Unitarian church.

There are a school fund, a Sunday school fund and a cemetery fund established by him, and by his will the town will benefit as residuary legatee to the amount of about $35,000. Furthermore, if no town shall assume the name of Cushman the fund of $10,000 is to revert to Barnardston.

Mr. Cushman was born in Barnardston August 9, 1805, the son of Polycarpus L. Cushman and Sally Wilcox Cushman. He was educated in the common schools, Greenfield and New Salem academies and Captain Alden's military academy, at Norwich, Vt. From the latter institution he received a degree of Master of Arts in 1827.

Finishing his education on his farm and taught school, but very early gave himself up to the activities of public life and literary research. In 1837, 1838 and 1839 he sat in the house of representatives, and in 1844 he was elected to the senate. A peculiar result of that election was that he sat by the side of his father, to whom he was opposed in politics.

In 1847 and for five years succeeding he was democratic candidate for lieutenant governor. He never was elected by the people to that office, but in 1851 no choice having been made by the people, he was chosen lieutenant governor by the legislature.

BLIND BASEBALL OPENS THIS WEEK

Pitcher Is of the Batter's Team, and the Umpire's Whistle Locates the Ball.

Louisville, Ky., May 12.—The baseball season at the Kentucky institute for the blind will begin next Wednesday after three weeks of preliminary practice. A series of games for the championship of the world will be played before the athletic contest with the Y. M. C. A. team, which is scheduled for May 25.

John D. Gregory, of the faculty, who has had charge of the athletic training among the blind boys, was responsible for the introduction of "blind baseball" last year and for the fact that the sport proved that other institutions throughout the country have adopted the system he compiled.

The pitcher belongs to the side at bat, and he endeavors to throw the ball so that the batsman will strike it. The batsman is required to hold out his bat, indicating where he is going to strike. The umpire then says "One, two, three!" when the pitcher delivers the ball. The batter strikes after "three."

The pitcher, the catcher and the center fielder are "seeing" boys, the none of the boys sees perfectly.

If the batter hits the ball the umpire indicates with whistle signals how far it has gone. The bases are indicated by the whistle the runner is called out.

GIANT SNAKE SLAIN IN FIFTH AVENUE, GOHAM

New York Sun Special Service.

New York, May 12.—A giant boa constrictor, 12 feet long and as large around as a man's thigh, was brought into the Tenderloin police station last night by a crowd of boys. They declared they had found the reptile alive on Fifth avenue near Fifteenth street, and had beaten it to death with clubs and cobble stones.

When the boys burst into the police station carrying a gunnysack, the sergeant wanted to know what the trouble was. The boys turned the sack upside down, and as the coils of the serpent slid to the floor there was a wild stampede. Finally Sergeant Wilson called from beneath a desk to learn if the reptile was alive. When assured the snake was dead the crowd returned.

DEAR ONES GONE; DIED A RECLUSE

Edward M. Bigelow of Boston Was Noted Lawyer When Death Turned His Life.

Poston, Mass., May 12.—When, two weeks ago, death stilled the heart of Edward M. Bigelow, there passed from the earth a remarkable man, who had cast his anathema against the world and its people and withdrawn himself from the activities of the world that he had learned to hate, to dwell nearly half a century as a recluse in one little room.

The death of his young wife and baby was the event that turned the tide of his life, forty-two years ago.

Of his extensive estate, worth about $300,000, he left almost all to Leslie Hastings, an adopted son, who is a sophomore at Harvard college.

The room in the Niles building from which Mr. Bigelow was borne was like a hermit's cell. From three walls, from floor to ceiling, leather-bound volumes of legal lore frowned from dingy bookshelves, while the remaining wall devoted to two windows, which bore testimony of the years, as almost every pane was cracked, while the sunshine was kept out by the accumulation of the dust, which had made the glass almost opaque.

An old-style desk took up most of the space in the center of the room, while one side was given over to a couch that had been the only bed of the hermit during his seclusion.

The desk was piled high with newspaper clippings, pamphlets and data relating to legal cases that he had argued before the highest courts.

Mystery in Career.

The mystery surrounding the old man's career has never been fully solved, although it is known that he began to shun the world soon after the death of his young wife, who gave up her life at the birth of her first child, which soon followed its mother to the grave.

From that time on a blight seemed to fall on Mr. Bigelow's life, and he forsook the companions of his youth and gave up a brilliant career to while away his time in solitude, surrounded only by his books, which had become the dearest friends he had.

He seemed to possess an insatiable desire for learning, and read with avidity the works of Kant and Hegel, Tyndall and Huxley. All his books were annotated with the scraps of information that he had picked up.

He was gifted with a remarkable memory, and in his active days was able to open any of the law books at the exact place that he wanted without consulting the index. So great was his ability in this line and so wide his reputation that many lawyers would go to call on him and ask him where they could find the data they wanted to argue points at law which were confusing them.

On these occasions Mr. Bigelow would put his hand to his forehead, and after thinking a short time would name the section and the chapter where they would find the desired information.

He prided himself much on this wonderful memory. He often made the statement that even if the Enneid of Virgil or the orations of Cicero should become lost to the world, he would be able to restore them from memory.

Eighty Years Old.

Mr. Bigelow was born eighty years ago in Marlboro, the eldest of twelve children of Edwin M. Bigelow. He earned the money to enter college by working on a shoe.

He entered Harvard when he was 17 years of age, in the same class with the late George F. Hoar and Professors Child and Lane, of Harvard.

Although he was not as well prepared as some fellow students, he rose to prominent position in his class. On the day of graduation he finished third in the class, only Professors Child and Lane being ahead of him. He often made the remark in his later years, that if he had taught school during part of the first year he was in college he would have finished at the head of his class.

Soon after graduating the pinch of poverty again made itself felt, and he went to work for six months while studying law.

After six months he applied himself to study, and he was admitted to the bar by Judge Forbes, of the supreme court after he had studied law a single year.

He was a great lawyer for those days, and his name appears on the records as having more cases in the supreme court than any other lawyer of his time.

He had been married scarcely more than a year when his wife died, and he retired from a life full of promise to lead the life of a recluse.
