DR. S. S. CURRY SAYS NO DECLINE IN ORATORY

DR. S. S. CURRY, Who Will Direct Work in Voice Culture and Expression at the U. of M. Summer School.

"Oratory in America is not on the decline, either in quality or importance. It is, however, undergoing a remarkable reform; one which to my mind is for the good." This is the opinion of Dr. S. S. Curry, head of the Boston School of Expression, who will conduct the advanced work in voice culture and expression at the university summer school. Dr. Curry is a recognized expert in his line of work and has carried his investigations over the world. The flowery, stilted and impassioned oratory of Edward Everett and his school is not the oratory of today, said Dr. Curry today. "Rather the Wendell Phillips style, natural, easy, simple and genuine is the oratory of today. Furthermore, owing to the widespread increase in education we have more speakers today."

"As to the importance which is still attached to oratory and to public speech, witness the last two presidential campaigns. Probably no man ever made more speeches than have been made by President Roosevelt or Mr. Bryan.

"The voice has a wonderful effect on the mind and the nerves not only of the speaker but also of the hearers. This is especially true in the school-room. I believe that fully 90 per cent of the breakdowns among teachers can be traced to this one thing, imperfect voice control. Perfect control means ease and greater efficiency.

Dr. Curry will give in addition to his class and laboratory work, some special public lectures which are connected with the department work of the summer school. Some of these will be illustrated with stereopticon, which will enable him to draw a parallel between art and the voice as well as illustrate their connection.

Lord Rosebury was the principal guest, and he delivered an address on books and booksellers.

Among those present by special invitation was E. D. Brooks of Minneapolis. He presided over a gathering when the toastmaster asked him to rise so that all might see him. His appearance above the table was the mark for thunderous applause.
