PUPILS' ORGAN RECITAL

An organ recital that certainly reflects great credit upon all the participants as well as upon Hamlin Hunt, their instructor, took place last evening at Plymouth church. The program was an excellent one, culled, as might have been expected, from the works of Alexandre Guilmant to a larger degree than from those of other organ-composers.

It would be difficult to cite anyone of the eight participants as especially deserving of commendation, since there was so wide a divergence in the numbers presented. Miss Minnie Wagner had perhaps the most difficult selection, the allegro vivace movement from Widor's "Fifth Symphony." It was well rendered and with adequate attention to expression and the use of the different stops.

The "Lohengrin" bridal chorus announced the approach of the bride, who entered alone. Her white gown had a yoke of lace, and she carried bride roses. She was attended by Miss Milie Page, sister of the bridegroom, who was in white and carried white carnations. Little Esther Hopper was ring bearer, and carried the ring in a rose. The best man was Arthur H. Hopper, cousin of the bridegroom.

The entire program was played thru without a single disturbing incident, save the strident piano across the street, whose dance tunes would force their way in thru the open windows.

ONE OF THEM. Columbus Dispatch. There were three men sitting together on a seat of the open car, and after they had talked politics for ten minutes one of them observed: "Excuse me, but here is my card."

"Call it what you please," said the man who was Dr. So-and-So, and then the second man produced his card. It showed that he was Undertaker So-and-So. Then the two looked at the third man, who made no move to produce a card, but who presently said: "Well, I s'pose I sorter belong to the profession myself."

"Druggist?" "No. I see to the grave-digging part."

FAIRY TALES NEEDED

Sara Cone Bryant Says the Young Should Have Them.

"It is a cheap, meaning thing to do to give a work of art to a child simply to teach him something," declared Miss Sara Cone Bryant at an intermediate teachers' meeting yesterday afternoon. "And the children think so, too. The story should be to him a matter of real joy, for that stimulates life and gives him larger experiences. All the while he is certainly learning, but the educational purpose is subtle and he does not realize it."

That the fairy tale has a distinct place in the education of the child was made clear in Miss Bryant's talk on "The Fairy Tale and the Child." Mature literature is simply permeated with the lore of children and of child races. That period of the child life devoted to fairy tales is similar to the stage in human development when fairy tales were made and believed, and, therefore, it is not only logical for little folk to like fairy lore, but to deprive them of it is robbery. Fairy lore is to the child what romance is to grown-ups, so that really grownups have no right to object to the fanciful tales so dear to childish hearts.

"And most of us," said Miss Bryant, naively, "are imbued with enough poetry to believe that there are some things truer than facts." The value of folk tales, according to Miss Bryant, lies in their imagery of fundamental truths, in their types of human experience, and in the fact that they are the "open sesame" to so much in adult literature.

Malcolm's OPENING

RUSSIAN CORRUPTION

Largely Responsible for Overwhelming Defeat of the Sea of Japan. London Spectator.

The report of Admiral Rojestvensky to the czar of the bat of Tsushima, which has hitherto been suppressed, has at last leaked out, and it is a very sad document for all friends of Russia. The admiral attributes his defeat to the condition of his squadrons, due to the dishonesty of the builders, to the incapacity of his crews, and to the spirit of mutiny among the seamen. In illustration of the first point, he affirms that on none of the vessels did the armorplating correspond to the official figures, while of the shells two-thirds would not explode. The second source of failure was fourteen executions, and in Admiral Nebogoff's squadron the mutineers nearly became masters.
