LAST FEW DAYS OF THE PIANO SALE

Quietly, steadily, the new and the showy pianos have been leaving our salesrooms, impelled by the mighty influence of price reductions, until now the end is rapidly approaching. You can buy from the last few remaining instruments with the certainty that even though the variety may not be quite as large as a week ago, the VALUES are as good, and that you will procure one of the greatest bargains that ever went out of a piano salesroom in this city.

Here is evidence in plain Arabic numerals: $215 buys a $400 Dunhamoff piano; $200 buys a $450 Henry P. Miller piano; $90 buys a $300 Brinkerhoff piano; $280 buys a $450 McPhail piano; $145 buys a $375 Sterling piano.

John A. Sherman, formerly of 2208 Sixth avenue S, writes from San Francisco to his brother and sister, Mrs. D. H. Rankin, 3216 Second avenue S.

W. G. Hollis, secretary of the Northwestern Lumbermen's association, has returned from Salt Lake City, having associated on his way back with refugees from the earthquake and fire.

Among the earthquake refugees at Los Angeles is W. S. Oliver of this city.

Under date of April 20, from Saratoga, Cal., just received from D. C. Bell Investment company, writes friends and relatives in Minneapolis telling of the earthquake and its effects.

"After all, a quake such as came to us last Wednesday morning is not so destructive as the tornado of Aug. 20, 1904, that swept Minneapolis, nor so terrifying."

Mr. Bell's letters written two days after the disaster and from a nearby point, show that even close to the scene of the disaster there was little news of its extent and that Minneapolis really had a better conception of the terrible disaster at that time.

LANDED JUST IN TIME FOR QUAKE

JOHN L. BARRETT BACK FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

Island Official and His Wife Were at the St. Francis, in San Francisco, and as He is an Earthquake Veteran, They Met the Emergency with Aplomb.

"I saw the burning of Manila by the insurgents in 1899, with a lot of firing going on, and we thought that was pretty bad, but it was nothing compared with the sight at San Francisco from the hills back of the city. Flames leaped from 100 to 150 feet in the air and the noise of the burning buildings, with a sort of subdued roar from the flames, combined to make it the worst fire I ever witnessed. I don't want to go thru anything like that again."

This statement summed up the impression of the San Francisco disaster by John L. Barrett, assistant treasurer of the Philippines, who arrived last night in Minneapolis with Mrs. Barrett.

The Barretts lost everything in their fire except what they carried in their suitcases, and will spend several days in the most extreme oblivion of the throng waiting at the gates for trains, they were conscious only of the loss being restored, and the crowd taking the situation at a glance, tearfully shared in the joy of the refugees.

Mr. Barrett lost everything in their fire except what they carried in their suitcases, and will spend several days in the most extreme oblivion of the throng waiting at the gates for trains, they were conscious only of the loss being restored, and the crowd taking the situation at a glance, tearfully shared in the joy of the refugees.

When they were in the city, they were not badly jarred by the earthquakes, and had plenty of time to pack their belongings. They spent some time going about the city to look at the earthquake ruins before they went to the home of a friend beyond the fire danger line.

Meanwhile Mr. Barrett had returned without difficulty to the St. Francis to find that some of the things left in his room, although he found the floors intact and no guard at the doors, Mr. Barrett finally did not enter because of the report that drunken militiamen were shooting indiscriminately.

The last night they told us that a great many of our boys had become intoxicated. There were no lights, all the wires were down, and the people were becoming very much afraid, and where we were soldiers were patrolling constantly.
