TIRED OF LIFE AWFUL SUFFERING

From Dreadful Pains From Wound on Foot—System All Run Down After Six Months' Agony—Not Able to Work—Completely Cured in Two Weeks

MIRACULOUS CURE BY CUTICURA REMEDIES

"Words cannot speak highly enough for the Cuticura Remedies. I am now seventy-two years of age. My system had broken down, and I was all run down. My blood was so bad that blood poisoning had set in. I had several doctors attending me, so finally I went to the hospital, where I was laid up for two months. My foot and ankle were almost beyond recognition. Dark blood flowed out of wounds in many places, and I was so disheartened that I thought surely my last chance was slowly leaving me. As the foot did not improve, you can readily imagine how I felt. I was simply disgusted and tired of life. I stood this pain, which was dreadful, for six months, and during this time I was not able to wear a shoe and not able to work. "Some one spoke to me about Cuticura. The consequences were I bought a set of the Cuticura Remedies of one of my friends who was a druggist, and the price that I gave after the second application was beyond description; it seemed a miracle, for the Cuticura Remedies took effect immediately. I washed the foot with the Cuticura Soap before applying the Ointment and I took the Resolvent at the same time. After two weeks' treatment my foot was healed completely. People who had seen my foot during my illness and who have seen it since the cure, can hardly believe their own eyes." Robert Schoenhauer, Newburgh, N. Y.

NO BACKSLIDING BY THE PRESIDENT

Senator Clapp Shows that Roosevelt Has Not Surrendered on Rate Bill.

By W. W. Jermaine.

Washington, May 12.—While a good deal is heard in the newspapers and elsewhere, to the effect that the president has abandoned his original position on the rate question, and indicated his acceptance of something that gives comfort to the opponents of that legislation, it is significant that no body in the senate is making any such claim. To a man, the president's friends in the senate, including the supporters of the house bill, maintain that he has not surrendered anything in accepting the Allison amendment. It is the unanimous opinion of these men that so-called so-called conservatives of the senate have been routed, horse, foot and dragons, as has been frequently set forth in this correspondence, and that the bill, as it will finally be enacted, will stand for even more than the president had originally demanded.

The question of court review is beset with so many legal refinements and technicalities that the average layman who attempts to consider it in detail. The word of somebody must be taken as to just what change there has been, if any, in the president's position, and it should be noted that the fact that all the friends of rate legislation in the senate regard the president's position as being unchanged. True Men Support It. It would obviously be very difficult to bring such men as Senators Dilliver, Nelson, Clapp and Allison—I mention these men because readers of this journal have known them and that they represent in this discussion—around to the support of any proposition which would give the courts the power of the "broad review" of which so much has been heard. The best evidence that the Allison amendment does not provide for any review is found in the fact that these men are among those who support it and say that it does not indicate any retrograde on the original position taken by the president. Senator Clapp today, in response to a request made by the Journal correspondent, dictated the following statement: "The president is certainly entitled to great credit for the stand he has taken in the solution of the rate legislation. When the bill was in the committee it became impossible to agree on any amendments, and we finally reported it out as it passed the house. Merely a Technicality. "The president felt that the bill was a fair reflection of the views which he had twice urged on congress. He also realized that any attempt to deprive one of his property rights without a day in court would be void, but he felt that while the bill did not in direct terms provide for going into court, yet it was free from any constitutional objection on that ground, because property rights guaranteed by the constitution could be tried in the courts under existing laws, and it was unnecessary to expressly state in the proposed law that such right existed. "This was also the view of many friends of the bill. There were others, however, also friendly to the bill, who insisted that it should be amended to provide that parties might go into court to assert their constitutional rights, and it was urged by them that if under the bill the right existed as we claimed that it did, there could be no possible objection to stating it in the bill. "In addition to this difference of views, there were some who favored what they called 'a broad review,' and this has given rise to some confusion. "Some three weeks ago, appreciating the force of position of some of the friends of the bill who insisted that it should plainly state what all of its friends felt, the measure was amended by adding such a statement, was discussed, and found expression finally in what has been known in public as the Long amendment. Did Not Change Bill. "This had nothing to do with what has been popularly understood as a 'broad review,' but, on the contrary, was conceived by it to be a plain statement of what it was claimed was the practical effect of the bill anyhow as it passed the house, namely, that parties could go into court to assert their rights, which the friends of the bill have always insisted could not be taken away. "After this was ordered printed, other suggestions along the same line were made, but it is known that the Allison amendment, which practically accomplishes the same as the Long amendment, seemed to meet with favor among the friends of the bill who had been contending that there should be a declaration in the bill of the character referred to. "The president, satisfied that this did not change the effect of the bill, issued a statement Saturday favoring the Allison amendment, with a portion of the Long amendment relating to notice being required before restraining orders should be issued. "Some of the enemies of the president are trying to get some comfort out of the situation by claiming that he has abated from his original advocacy of the bill. This is most unfair and unjust to the president. Had Three Courses. "Three things were open to him: "First—He could have stood back and said that the senate might fight this out; that he had to deal with only general principles; but this would have been foreign to his nature, when, by the just interposition of his own views, he could effect a speedy solution of the question. "Second—He might have stood back and let the difference of opinion possibly defeat the measure without subjecting him to any criticism, had he seen fit to insist upon the exact terms of the original bill, and by assuming to insist upon what was in effect no material change, he could have easily created the impression by his mere insistence was material, throwing the responsibility upon congress. A smaller man might have done this. "Third—He might entirely have disregarded the criticism of his enemies; that he had shown an abatement of his original purpose. He was broad enough in the interest of what he believed to be wise legislation, and his desire for its present passage, to rise above any such consideration, and boldly declared in favor of the amendment."

HUNTOON OBJECTS Co-respondent Does Not Want to Pay Divorce Case Costs. Journal Special Service. Trenton, N. J., May 12.—Major Frank Huntoon of New York has filed in chancery an appeal from Vice Chancellor Pitney's decision advising a decree of divorce for James B. Duke, the tobacco magnate, from his wife, Mrs. Lillian N. Duke, on the ground of adultery. Huntoon objects to the court's advisement which adjudges him guilty of improper conduct with Mrs. Duke. He further objects to that part of the decision which makes him liable for one-half of the court fees in the cross petition of Mrs. Duke accusing Duke of improper conduct with the housekeeper at Somerville. Another objection he makes is to the judgment that he pay $3,000 for counsel fees. Huntoon was made the co-respondent in the divorce proceedings and at his request he was admitted as part defendant. For that reason one-half of the costs were assessed against him. MEMPHIS, TENN.—A homesteader of the name of Diddle, living near Solway, died in the hospital here from poisoning. The case is supposed to be one of suicide. MENOMONIE, WIS.—A crew of 125 men, employed in the sawmill of the Davis & Starr Lumber company of Webster, have struck for a ten-hour day, and the mill is shut down.
