

MAN DRESSES NATURALLY ONCE MORE

FAREWELL TO THE PADDED SHOULDERS, MONKEY JACKETS AND PEGTOP TROUSERS

"Where are the freaks of yesterday?" is the burden of the song warbled by the observing poet as he strolls the streets and casts his eye upon the sartorial revelations incident to the blowing of the first fall winds.

A suggestion of familiarity that will not down is carried by those sloping shoulders propped up the avenue by two orthodox-looking legs.

"Why, that's Hal," the observer says to himself. "No, it can't be Hal. That's his gait, but HE had such beautifully broad shoulders. And this fellow is so much shorter in the waist. It does seem as if it must be Hal, although I never knew a friend to shrink both ways on me unless he knew I was broke. I'll tackle him, anyway."

The unknown but suspected individual, upon being tackled, turns out to be the self-same Hal.

"But how thin you are!" remonstrates the observer.

"This nothing," retorts the one thus maligned. "I'm twenty pounds heavier than I was last fall."

"Well, there's something the matter with your dimensions. You used to have such big shoulders. I'll bet those shoulders took a dozen girls away from me last season."

"Well, the tailor's taken 'em away from me, now," Hal remarks, and in that remark is the captive feline released from the imprisoning sack.

The man who are foremost in the battle for new and proper styles have a new slogan this year. It is: "Get close to nature." The old padded shoulders, the long and flowing sack suits, the peg-top trousers, the monkey jackets, all the fads of the past few years, enmeshed in which the howling swells of the community have furnished gratuitous entertainment to the gamins of the pavement, and the others more washed—all have been given the skid-doo sign by the men who make the styles in London, New York, Minneapolis and other points less important.

No longer is it proper for the anemic youth with the xylophone ribs to issue forth upon Nicollet wrapped and swaddled in the puffed and padded sartorial simulations like unto a Heidelberg student going into a duel. Neither is it now considered au fait for the favorite son of a prominent family to hide half his stocky stature in the skirts of a sack suit that would look better on the low comedian of a vaudeville show.

The young gentleman—and his name is legion—who used fondly to insert his rather extremities in trousers miles from the top and tapering to the point beyond which it would be possible to force the foot has passed away, to make room for one who wears the trousers which make some humble pretense of following the lines laid down by nature. And only the ones farthest from being "wise" will now permit themselves to wear one of those coats ripped part way up the back which carry the same suggestion that the place was made for a tail and that the creature inside the garment is a trained monkey in disguise.

The flat has gone forth. Men who patronize the tailors must either have shoulders upon which a coat can be draped—or they will have to go to work and develop them. The true tailor, with the honor of his profession in his eye, would no longer think of padding a masculine shoulder than of extending credit where credit was not due. Moreover, the skirts of the sack suit of this day and season will not drag at the heels, but will terminate a little below the line along which the gentleman from the far west might go when reaching for a gun. The funny little flap in the rear of the coat tail has also been eliminated and there is a general tendency to make all garments fit the figure, instead of making the figure fit the garment by fair means or foul.

Extremes of style appear to run in cycles. It is about twenty years ago that the monkey, military or Seymour jacket, with its absurdly abbreviated skirt and its heeling crags and threatening promontories, which took the place of shoulders, first had violent vogue. Contemporaneously with this visitation came an epidemic of peg-top trousers—some of them measuring twenty-four inches at the knee and fifteen inches around the bottom.

The country survived this visitation and was fairly prosperous up to 1893, when similar styles again came into vogue and many young men who have since become valuable members of the commonwealth were repeatedly seen in public with jackets whose tails barely came below the shoulder blades, wearing at the same time trousers which tapered from a balloonic bulge, which represented the waist to an ankle as small as the limit of the law.

Twice in this period the pendulum has swung back again and long skirts and trousers of reasonable design have been worn where men most do congregate, and elsewhere. Generally the pendulum has swung so far that it has been from one extreme to another, but just at present the profession of tailoring is in that transitional period which might properly be termed the time of normal styles.

The man who is well dressed this fall and winter will wear for a sack suit a coat of medium length which, instead of hanging straight from the armpits, as heretofore, will be moderately tight at the waist—not "corset shaped," but just following the natural lines of the figure.

For the genteel business or professional man, the proper suit this season will include a cutaway frock coat with hip pockets, and a fancy waistcoat. The dresser style of cutaway will follow the general lines of the half-dress cutaway, but with a longer roll to the lapel and with two instead of three buttons. The hip pocket flaps will be set diagonally and the fancy waistcoat will show above the opening of the coat, if it be six or seven buttons.

The Sensible Sack Suit.

The other kind of business man—the one who works for someone else, or who gets his clothes out of press—requires a little different sort of sartorial surroundings, and for this kind of man the sack suit is much preferred. This may be single-breasted, three-buttoned sack, with square or slightly peaked lapels and a roll seven or eight inches long; or, if the man be tall, a four-buttoned coat would be better.

There are also two different kinds of double-breasted sacks, either one of which would be considered the proper thing. The more conservative presents a roll of moderate length, with three buttons, and the other a roll to the waist line, with two buttons and the edges flat braided. Both styles have broad, well-peaked lapels and narrow collars. In the matter of braid the best local tailors insist that braid is for evening dress only, and then to be used most sparingly.

The decree has gone forth that in overcoats the lapels shall be wider than before and that the skirt shall not be fitted in at the waist. Turned-up cuffs will be proper and one of the proper patterns will be almost without the bottom flare—in other words, the box coat will be it. For fall wear the collar is to be of the same goods as the coat, but for winter wear a velvet collar will be considered quite the thing. The swellest coat of the season will be a double-breasted over-frock with hip flaps, and waist seam slanting down to a point at the small of the back. It has three buttons at the front.

Worsted will predominate among the fabrics, although the chevrons brought out last season are more elaborate than ever before. The "worsted and wool" is a fabric whose bright colors and designs are much in favor as it holds the shape well, is easy to tailor and feels good on the body. Checks and stripes are also permissible. Grays will be the leading color with blacks and browns and blues trailing after. Fancy vestings and trouserings will hardly be affected by the seasons as they are generally regarded as being about perfection.

The extremes of fashion generally leave evening dress unmolested, but even in evening clothes the coats are undergoing some changes. One of the new ideas is to have peaked lapels and a silk faced roll extending almost to the bottom of the dress coat, and with the entire forepart, lapel, skirt and all, made from one piece of cloth. It carries three buttons, two inches apart.

The ushering in of the reign of common sense in the matter of men's apparel will probably be greeted with acclaim by men and women of all classes. To be sure those fond of the ludicrous will miss the bulging shoulders and the long-tailed skirts. Some there may be who will sigh for the days of the peg-top trousers, in which men walked about and were unshamed. There may also be heard here and there a faint cry for the return of the bifurcated tail—the tailor's appreciation of the Darwinian theory—but the well-dressed man of the period will for this season go about his business or pleasure—an ungodly preacher against the doctrine of the bustle, the symmetrical and the rat.

Behold the Pompadour!

Only in one particular will the modern mere man who comes from his tailor arrayed in the purple and fine linen of the period bow before the gods of affection. The pompadour is "in" again. It is not the old-time pompadour, achieved by fiercely brushing the hair straight back from the forehead and then clipping it "mid-dling new and nifty." The American public is therefore indebted to its colleges for two more or less decorative institutions—the monkey jacket, now passe, and the pompadour, quite au fait.

and, as is the case in nearly all styles which have vogue over here, came through a desire upon the part of the eastern tailors to cater to an incipient and half-nebulous demand upon the part of the undergraduate college world for "something new and nifty." The American public is therefore indebted to its colleges for two more or less decorative institutions—the monkey jacket, now passe, and the pompadour, quite au fait.

CAMPAIGN OFFERINGS WITHIN PALE OF LAW

General Black Denies Republicans Are Levying on Washington Federal Employees.

By W. W. Jermans. Washington, Oct. 13.—General John C. Black, chairman of the civil service commission, informs the Journal correspondent that the commission knows absolutely nothing, beyond what has appeared in the newspapers, regarding the alleged purpose of the republican congressional committee to levy campaign contributions upon the civil service employees in this city. Had the congressional committee made any movement in that direction it is certain that notice of it would have been brought to the attention of the commission.

"We have had no such notice," says General Black, "and are assuming that there has been no effort to violate the law."

The rumor that the republican campaign managers were to endeavor to secure funds from the clerks has arisen thru the fact there has been established in this city a sub-headquarters for the collection of campaign funds. These sub-headquarters are to cover the entire south Atlantic seaboard, and not Washington merely. No attempt has been made to get in touch with department clerks, and it is assumed that none will be made, for the character of the law is such, and likewise the president's attitude that any such attempt would not only be attended with failure, but would react against the republican party.

Sub-headquarters such as have been established here have been set up also in various other parts of the country, and are understood to be for the purpose of making a more or less thorough canvass of republicans generally in the interest of dollar subscriptions.

HE LOST NOTHING.

Harper's Weekly. Harry's mother had given him an apple and told him to peel it before he ate it. Returning to the room after a few moments' absence, and seeing no peeling, she asked: "Did you peel your apple, Harry?" "Yes," answered Harry. "What did you do with the peelings?" she asked. "Ate them."

Spend Twenty Minutes With Our Manager And Learn the Best Credit

Let Hartman "feather your nest"

AT SOME STORES it's difficult to get at the manager—especially when you do not make it known to a certainty that you intend to buy. Not so at Hartman's. Our manager takes special delight in meeting people, and we especially invite you to interview him and learn all about the different methods of giving credit before you open an account anywhere. If you have had experience elsewhere it will profit you greatly to learn from him what the Hartman Plan "Credit Service" is. He will take you into his private office and go over the proposition thoroughly with you—will explain every feature of the service. You'll know when he has finished that it has taken years of study, a keen sense of the needs of the people and a very generous spirit to perfect such a far-reaching, practical and helpful plan.

It is such Credit Service as YOU need. This service may be arranged and adjusted to suit YOUR requirements at all times. It provides that no payments shall be made when you are ill or out of work, and that in case of death your family will be given the goods without another cent being paid. Step in tomorrow and talk with our manager about it.
