Spanish Influenza is an Air-Borne Infection

In the American influenza epidemic of 1916, bacteriologists found that only a small percentage of the cases they examined were infected with the influenza bacillus.

They found either the streptococcus, the pneumococcus, or the micrococcus-catarhalis more prevalent than the influenza bacillus.

The most dangerous complications occur in influenza through the increased virulence of other microbes in the mouth, the throat and the air passages, to which the infection has been conveyed.

For this purpose Kolynos Dental Cream and Kolynos Liquid were created. When intelligently employed in daily use they establish a condition of sanitation in the mouth, the throat and the air passages unfavorable to acquiring or disseminating air-borne infection.
