ARIS, Jan. 22.—The Monte Carlo | all adornment around the hem or just | were gathered on each side of a flat rant opened the other day, and the Prince of Monaco celebrated his birthday with a reception of a very elaborate character. Baron Henri de Rothschild, who has established himself at Monte Carlo for the spring season, has presented the Automobile club of Nice with a cup, which is to be contournament. So, you see, social affairs are in full swing all along the Riviera. Paris is never more charming than at this time of the year, but it seems to be the smart Parisian's chief alm of existence to get anywhere, anywhere out of the gay capital just before and during Lent. The butterflies of fashion have flitted off with trunks full of stunning creations, which the lesser lights will not be slow to copy later on. But the question which is interesting women generally is what Dame Fashion will deign to smile upon in the way of spring materials and modes.

The harbingers of spring in fabric lines which have made their advent all point to a one tone color scheme In the silks, with louisine and soft taffetas in the lead, the designs are mostly fine stripes and small dots in self color with a scattering of wafer spots over the pattern. Checks in green and white, blue and white and he popular magpie contrast have all over their surface this wafer effect carried out in the predominant color of the groundwork. Organdies in mauve have dainty orchids in the same tones sprinkled around in a charming manner, and instead of a riot of radiant and bright tones clashing in an attempt at har-mony we have in the new materials beautiful shadings carried out in artistic values.

Double chiffon for afternoon tollets is a coming dress material. Paquin has just turned out an exquisite costume in this new chiffon. The thick chiffon gown is black and mounted over an underskirt of black satin. These chiffon frocks, whether for day or evening wear, are never mounted over a contrasting shade, as the material is too opaque to show up well over a color. A gown of double chiffon needs no apology when two waists are provided for a single skirt. Duchess satin, the handsome silk of other days, is one of the novelties of the season, and a pretty notion of trimdallions of lace outlined with little ruchings of the duchess. Mohair is to be a favorite utility dress material-not the mohair of our remembrance, but a soft and glorified fabric sprinkled with little flecks of ming a gown of this satin is with me-white on dark grounds. The skirt may tease us with a change of tactics later on, but the manifesto for the spring months is that it will be gathered and fitted in a perfect manner to give that svelte and clinging ef-fect the smart frock demands.

Instead of skirts being trimmed in an archipelago sort of fashion with little islands and isthmuses of lace and fripseason has begun earlier than above it. An unstitched band of veivet usual this year. Ciro's restautucks of the dress material is a new skirt trimming.

As a demiseason costume the Parisians are affecting a bluish gray gown. A charming frock of this shade for morning wear has a full, floppy skirt stitched in two bands around the bottom with the walst fullness over the tested for later on. At the La Bolie hips laid in tiny plaits. The loose jack-golf links they have already heid a et bodice has a basque at the back and a broad, stitched belt fastened by buttons in front. The front of the bodice has slik lined revers opening over a soft silk vest. One of the new pointed toques, narrow at the sides and worn tilted back on the coiffure, accompanies this trotting costume.

Two lovely toilets whose destination is the sunny south were displayed the other day in the Rue de la Paix. A natty creation of beige cloth was perhaps the more striking. The skirt of this gown, which just touched the ground all round, was trimmed with rows of stitching in blue silk. A dou-ble pointed flounce was outlined by galloon of light blue striped with darker shade and sprinkled with white diamond lozenges in openwork design. The fichu shaped pelerine was adorned with the same galloon. Long tassels fell from the epaulets on the shoulders and from the short tabs in front. The becoming pointed neckband was of venetian red panne.

The other costume was of pinkish cloth flecked with white and various peries, the correct mode now is to place | colors. The draped skirt and bodice apron panel. A tab shaped collarette in a lighter shade of plain silk bound with red velvet fastened with irregular straps of white cloth. The standing collar, deep collarettes and pointed cuffs were of white silk lawn elaborately embroidered in red. A black rough straw hat bordered with white lace and trimmed with pink ribbon and black tips was sent south with the gown.

I have come to the conclusion the more than half the people who look into fashion papers for ideas do so in the hope of finding an idea for this frock or that coat which they contemplate having made or think of making themselves. Oh, those plannings and contrivings! How hard one works over them and how honestly proud one is of a successful result! The young girl or married woman who goes out and strives to be well and suitably dressed on an inadequate sum has troubles of her own. A dancing gown which must look attractive and can only last a short time is one of her greatest trials. Bearing this need in mind, I think I can help out in an emergency of this kind by suggesting a smart frock so simple of construction that the merest dressmaking novice may safely hope to succeed in its manufacture.

The basic fabric is of white voile de sole, a material which has superseded mousseline de sole in favor. The skirt s gathered to simulate a hip yoke. Lower down, at the knee, is a flounce trimmed with four narrow bias ruffles. This flounce is shirred to the skirt proper. The dainty little bloused waist is gathered three rows across the decolleage, which is outlined with closely clustered pink roses. These tiny blossoms form shoulder straps and sleeve supports and appear again on the skirt at the head of the deep flounce looped together with narrow velvet ribbon. The waist for evening tollets, according to the latest dictate of La Mode, is encircled by a slightly draped corselet belt, in this case carried out in deep rose panne. The silk foundation is made separately and stiffened up nine inches from the hem, the stiffening cut on the cross and fitted around the skirt Low bodices have an uncomfortable habit of slipping unless the shoulder straps are tight. Any pressure is apt to make the arms look red, but the insertion of a piece of silk elastic a half inch wide at the shoulder strap overcomes this difficulty. It is hardly necessary to say this gown is handmade. I would like to describe a blouse, an evening bodice, which condescends to harmonize with its accompanying skirt and is not like the usual blouse, a thing apart, "with us, but not of us." This pretty little blouse is of finely tucked black chiffon. The very full ruffle outlining the V neck is caught up in tiny tucks with threads of gold. Soft folds of gold tissue are arranged fichu fashion over the ruffle. The sleeves are small Victorian puffs. If a blouse of this kind be worn with any dressy black skirt one has an ensemble costume. An odd freak of fashion is to cut the evening waist almost high in front and in a decided V at the back CATHERINE TALBOT.
