THE LAVENDER PAPER DOLL

BY S. L. TINSLEY.

...other, for he is looking in another direction from you. Mildred's smile had faded. She leaned forward and struck the cards from the fortune teller's hand. "I don't believe it," she cried, angrily. "You may hit what you please, Gretta Harris, but you shan't say Harold is unfaithful. You were always jealous, you know you were. Let me tell you, my dear girl, that it was I who sent him away! I quarreled with him, I drove him away. Tonight he wanted to be friends, but I was a—"

Dr. Plummer, rector of St. Mark's cathedral at Lake City, Minn., is a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Delano of this city. Mr. Delano and Dr. Plummer are old-time friends. The home of Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Robinson was the scene of a very enjoyable musicale last evening, when their little daughter, Ruth, entertained about fifty of their friends with an informal programme. The little girl is quite a genius for one of her years, and the skill displayed in the numbers given by her would have done credit to one much older. Assisting the young pianist were her teacher, Miss Louise Lamson, Miss Elizabeth Lamson, violinist, and Miss Mary Mayne, reader. Sweet peas and nasturtiums were effectively used in decorating the room, and the hostess was assisted in serving repush him aside. He stumbled against the table and then— Mildred was running across the lawn, her paper dress flying from her in billiant sparks, a halo of flames enveloping her form. Close behind her, his teeth set, the scarlet robe hugged to his breast, was Harold. Mildred had reached the edge of the artificial lake. In that moment Harold, with one last great effort, sprang to her side. Throwing the gypsy cloak about her, he gathered the girl in his arms and sprang into the water. Ten minutes later Mildred was lying on the bank beneath the trees. When she opened her eyes a pale, wet face was bending above her. "Harold!" "Yes, Milly!" The girl lifted her head and looked down at her dress; it was gone. The wet gypsy cloak was wrapped about her. A wan little smile crept into her face. "Poor little lavender doll, where is she?" "Gone forever, thank heaven! But Milly has returned."

...of the Children's hospital, giving a paper-doll social at Mrs. Townly. The grounds had been lent to them, and had planned a dance in the young girls were to be dressed dolls, and the young men their partners for the dance. The girls made paper dolls with paper hats to match, and a stiff doll-like walk. Little. Oh, she is in lavender, said Henrietta Sumner to a question. man who was interested in Henrietta and walked with her. She was a tall woman, with large, dark eyes. A woman who wanted to help in his troubles, but did not seem to be herself at one time she began to watch the girl standing by her side to repeat her question. Dolce was aware of her "serve you?" Dolce turned hastily toward the demure maiden, gowned in foot in pale lavender, and with bunches of violets, was expressionless. The blue wide open, while no doll of those pink cheeks, smooth brown hair, Mrs. recognized Harold's raling. The mother-in-law, a moment her son's words, her charm had already in her. I wish I could smooth out my doll, she thought to herself. "I was waiting for you, I see him coming, so take our order." The doll did not turn to look at the man who came up and sat at her table. She waited for her order. "Would you like Harold?" Dolce, mother of that voice the Lavender suddenly came to life, and sat at the speaker. When met Harold Dolce smiled, and had regained control of her was again the lavender young man's face became and he looked in an opposite served her table faithfully, and would tremble. Twice she ruffled skirt and was content for glue, but whenever Harold, she was only a pale man would have left the seat, but his mother detained her, and she could not tell that Harold would be needed. tables had been carried the lanterns lighted among the paper lamps. Beneath a light tree was a tent, in which Dolce had been sitting earlier in the evening. Finding it deserted, he sat upon a bench was the new-fashioned robe, the faded worn. Sitting down, he laid his chin upon his hands gloomily out of the open swinging lanterns. Beneath a group of young men saw a girl, her hand out about the slender paper ruffle adorned bouquet. The girl turned, slowly toward the tent. In Harold had conceived an idea of the future had the lavender doll. He told her about the cards, and cut them three times, the figure bent lower, and began to read their meaning. "I had a lover," he heard laughed. "Have I, and tell me was he rich?" reader ignored the question, and his voice went on reading. "I love you dearly, but now it is, there seems to be another." "Have suffered the tortures and diseases of the eye can realize."
