

NEW YORK FASHIONS

Flowers, Lace, Capes, A New Evening Coat.

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—That the grace and beauty of Madame de Pompadour extends to the present day, is evident in the revival of fashions and fancies peculiarly her own.

Elegant sashes, ten or twelve inches wide, bordered by plain satin of black or a contrasting color, are eagerly taken up by those who can afford them, and as a variety of high bodices, shirred at front and back, on one or more cords and edged by a double ruffle, are made of less expensive Pompadour ribbon, but, of course, do not give such a handsome finish as a long, flowing sash.

A handsome costume worn at the Metropolitan opera-house on the opening night by a prominent society leader was black Chantilly lace and Pompadour of silk. The front and sides of the skirt were of lace over white silk, and the train of silk and draped in surplice style, cut quite low across the front, closing by three lapels, each with a large rhinestone brooch at the center.

Another charming costume worn in a neighboring box was of pink chiffon cloth, the skirt of alternate panels of white lace and chiffon. On the lace panels were long, narrow pink satin puffs, ending in three graceful bows of pink satin ribbon, falling over a deep, white lace flounce, with which the lower edge of the skirt was finished.

Christmas presents are now a very interesting subject, and so many attractions are offered that possibly a suggestion may not be out of place.

Large flowers are used in great profusion on lace capes and berthas, not only attached to the left shoulder, but oftentimes to both, and of course falling to the belt at the front.

A low-necked coat on the Louis XIII. order, made of plain silk, embroidered or around the skirt, or of figured silk, or of plain velvet, is very dashing, and, worn with a white lace skirt either plain or flounced, makes an elegant evening, dinner or reception costume.

Lovers of art have thronged Carnegie library auditorium since the opening of the sixth annual exhibition of the Utah Art Institute, which commenced Wednesday afternoon. An interesting collection of about two hundred oil paintings, water colors and examples of pastels work are

The Woodmen of the World dispensed their pleasant hospitality Wednesday evening at Toller's dancing academy. About 300 people participated in the festivities. The most interesting feature of the evening was the exhibition drill given by the degree team under the direction of Capt. Morris, which brought forth hearty applause. Exquisite music and an exceptionally good programme contributed to make the affair a distinct social success.

Mrs. S. L. Brick was the charming hostess Monday afternoon at a very prettily arranged Kensington at her home on Twenty-fourth street. The house was made bright with quantities of cut flowers which were beautifully grouped in the different rooms. The personnel of the party was: Mesdames Conlisk, Cullen, Joyce, Balcon, Conroy, Fitzgerald, McCormick, G. W. Larkin, E. A. Larkin,

Mills, Rhine, Rathbone of Evansville, Wyo., Nelson, Lindsay and Miss of Raton, N. M. The hostess was graciously assisted by Mrs. G. W. Larkin and a dainty and tempting luncheon was served. The whole affair was characterized by perfect taste, and the hostess showered with congratulations. This was the first of a series of Kensingtons to be given by Mrs. Brick.
