

Just a Few Anecdotes

An Attack on Mediaeval Chivalry.

Mark Twain dislikes the novels of Walter Scott. He thinks that the spirit of chivalry that these novels inculcate is a bad thing for modern times.

"It was a silly age, the age of chivalry," said Mr. Clemens not long since. "His thoughts were silly, and his customs were silly. I like to see it held up to ridicule, not to admiration."

"I am in sympathy, therefore, with a remark that old George Carter once made. George was smoking his pipe by the kitchen stove while his daughter read aloud a historical novel about Richard Coeur de Lion."

"Then the noble knight threw his glove in the face of the craven earl," read the young woman.

"George looked up, interested.

"What did he do that for?" he asked.

The Discouraged Rats.

Senator Newlands of Nevada was talking about farming.

"Farmers are progressive and go-ahead," he said. "They keep in touch with all the new agricultural inventions, and such inventions as are of value they adopt as soon as they can."

Senator Nevada laughed.

"In my boyhood, in Mississippi," he said, "I knew a farmer who adopted eagerly every new farming device that came out."

"To insult him, of course," said the reader.

"George chuckled.

"Well," said he, in a superior tone, "I think that there would have been more sense in his conduct if he had kept his feet in the glove at the time of throwing it."

"Inspected the farmer's chicken-house one day, and found several rats scampering about in it. A chicken-house in such a condition seemed to me deplorable, and I took the farmer to task about it immediately."

"Look here, Mr. Jones," I said, "why don't you clear the rats out of your chicken-house?"

"They don't do no harm," said Mr. Jones.

"Don't they eat the eggs?" I said.

"Not now," he answered. "They used to, but now no."

"How is it, I asked, 'that they have stopped'?"

"Mr. Jones stroked his lips a slight smile that had appeared there.

"I think," he said, "that these here new fangled chins nest-eggs has sort of discouraged 'em."

An Old Vintage.

The late Col. P. W. Keyes, the noted pioneer miner, said a resident of Virginia City, "will be missed here, for he had a generous hand and a witty tongue."

"It would be easy to multiply stories of his charities. It would be easy to multiply stories of his ready wit. I'll give you a story of the latter sort.

"Col. Keyes and I went one day to lunch together at the Virginia City restaurant that was Mark Twain's favorite when he was an editor here. We decided to have a spring lamb. The waiter brought the lamb and it was tough, with a muttony flavor.

"Waiter," said Col. Keyes, "do you call this spring lamb?"

"That is what I do, sir," said the waiter firmly. "Genuine spring lamb, that 'ere."

"Ahem," said Col. Keyes. "What year?"

Manuscripts to Burn.

Clyde Fitch, who could sell a play a week if he could write that fast, was encouraging a budding dramatist to persevere.

"Keep on," said Mr. Fitch. "Work every day. Don't permit yourself to be idle a moment. It is in our moments of idleness that the numbing influence of discouragement comes over us. In our hours of work we never despair.

"The road is uphill at first. It was uphill for Shakespeare, for Plautus, for Sadou, at first. All these men, like you, were once beginners, and were sneered at and brushed aside as beginners, amateurs, know-nothings.

"It is, indeed, a tremendous undertaking to get a first play produced. So many are written, so few are put on. An English playwright, with a gift of humorous exaggeration, illustrated this fact once. He told me how he submitted a comedy to a celebrated actor, and how, in the course of the conversation, this actor had said:

"Don't you think the room is rather cold?"

"It is rather cold," said the young playwright.

"The actor rang, and a servant appeared at the door.

"James," he said, "put three more manuscripts on the fire."

Charities.

Ex-Postmaster-General Wynne, like many other public officials, is asked to subscribe to innumerable charities, good, bad and indifferent.

The majority of these supplications the Postmaster-General is obliged to refuse.

on one ground or another. To accede to them all, indeed, he would have to be a Croesus.

"I want you to subscribe to so-and-so," said an old friend of Postmaster-General Wynne's one day. "It is a grand charitable report—200 cases. Look at this. Shall I put you down for fifty?"

"It does untold good," said the Postmaster-General, hesitating. He had never heard of the charity before, and there were at that very time a dozen worthy standing in need of his assistance. So he hesitated.

"Ah—the fact is—really, you know—" he stammered.

"Remember, Robert," he said, "he gives twice who gives quickly."

"Yes," said the Postmaster-General, "because you come around later on, I suppose, and bother him for another subscription."

Almost Prohibitive Penalty.

"Justice David J. Brewer," said a Philadelphia, "made an address not long ago at Haverford. After this address there was an informal little reception. It was very interesting. It was to have been during a ball in the convention. Will you please tell me, etc. Justice Brewer smiled and answered: "Two mothers-in-law."
