CHICAGO, Nov. 12.—Seeking revenge upon the man who he declares had alienated the affections of his wife, Morris Jacobs, a physical culture instructor, tonight shot and perhaps fatally wounded F. H. Forer, a painter and paper-hanger, besides accidentally shooting two other persons.

Starts Firing in Saloon.

The shooting occurred in a saloon, where Jacobs found Forer drinking with several friends. As Jacobs entered the door Jacobs fired three shots at Forer, one wounding him in the back, the bullet entering the abdomen, while one of the other two shots struck Roy, porter in the saloon, in the shoulder.

Stray Bullet Hits Boy.

A boy for whom the police are searching, was hit by a stray bullet from Jacobs' revolver during a street chase that followed the saloon affray. Jacobs was arrested while he was pursuing Forer.

One Man's Luck.

Some years ago a man in England had an aged aunt who died, leaving him sole legatee of all her personal estate. When he came to examine into her effects there was nothing worth carrying away. Of the diamonds and money which she had possessed there was nothing left.

A Practical Hero.

It is possible to be too practical. There was a halo of heroism about a man whose doing is recalled by the death of Edham Pasha. The Grand Duke Michael was seated in his tent at the siege of Plevna, when a Turkish gunner, by good luck or good management, threw a shell into the generalissimo's presence. Before it could explode, in popped a rawboned Russian sentry, who picked up the hissing shell, and hurled it into the river. The Grand Duke called on the man. "Do you know that you have saved my life?" he said. "Since you say so, my general, you must be rewarded." The general went on. "Now, tell me, would you rather have a hundred rubles or the Cross of St. George?" The man pondered for a moment. "What is the worth of the cross, my general?" he queried. "Oh, it is worth very little, intrinsically, perhaps not more than four money value which counts." That decided the soldier. "Then, my general, I would like the Cross of St. George and ninety-five rubles."—St. James's Gazette.

Improvement in Locomotives Needed.

It is not complimentary to engineering talent that while locomotive builders have increased enormously in size during the past ten or twelve years, close on to 100 per cent in point of heating surface and grate area, very little has been done to lighten the labor of the locomotive fireman.

THE HARVEST MONTH IN THE ORANGE GROVES

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—This is the harvest month in the great orange groves of southern California, the time when all the available men, women and children are busy gathering the golden fruit. Statistics collected by the Department of Agriculture show that in the season of 1904-5 about 31,000 carloads of oranges were shipped from California, and this season the number carloads will probably reach 35,000, or enough to make a thousand trains, each of thirty-five cars.

How Oranges are Packed for Shipment.

The Washington navel orange, which is now the standard orange of California and famous throughout the world, was brought to the United States from Brazil thirty-two years ago. Two plants were obtained by the Department of Agriculture at Washington; two more, born of these, were first planted in California by Luther C. Tibbitts in 1874. From these two plants have come the most profitable orange groves of California to-day.

Johnston's Drug Store. He said nothing, but there was a word of wisdom in his smile. "Oh, yes, certainly," interposed Mr. Bennett, perceiving the predicament, for Mr. Platt's inquiry expressed the story. "I'll put you on floor 12." Mr. Platt didn't occupy rooms on floor 12.

Senator Thomas C. Platt of New York was one of the first guests to register at the Gotham. When he entered the hotel he was met by its manager, Mr. Bennett, who ministered personally to Mr. Platt's wants.

Mr. Platt inquired, as he turned the register for Mr. Platt to inscribe, "I'll give you a suite on floor 12."

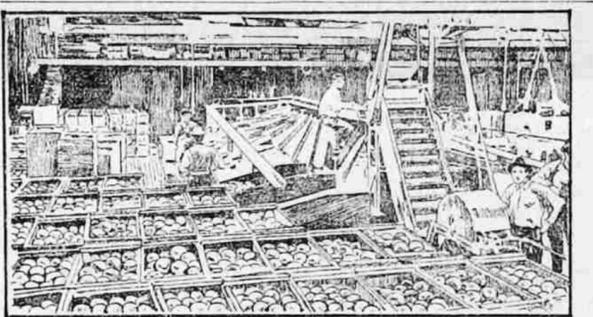

Mr. Platt inquired, as he turned the register to look up and smile knowingly. He said nothing, but there was a word of wisdom in his smile. "Oh, yes, certainly," interposed Mr. Bennett, perceiving the predicament, for Mr. Platt's inquiry expressed the story. "I'll put you on floor 12." Mr. Platt didn't occupy rooms on floor 12.

The Gotham manager accepted the advice, and there is no longer a floor 12 in the house.—New York Times.

Picking the Golden Fruit.

legend Venus planted the first orange tree on the island of Cyprus. In Rome the fruit was later known as "Adam's apple" or "Paradise apple" because it was supposed to have been the fruit of the forbidden tree in Paradise. If this myth be credible, the oldest families of Europe are more intimately connected with the humble orange of commerce. So far as history authentically knows, the orange originated in India and China, and was spread by the Arabs to Syria, Africa and Spain. In Sanskrit it has been called "ragruga" in Arabic, "naranga"; in Spanish, "naranja"; while in Italian this became softened to "arancia" and in Provençal, "orange"—the name which persists in our language today.

How Oranges are Packed for Shipment.

the glittering fortunes they had been seeking were impossible of achievement. Hundreds of men perished in the search for the boards hidden in the heart of the hills, and many perished on the scorching deserts of the bleak, wintry mountains. But some of the wisest ones pushed beyond the mountains of ice and snow, and came to a valley of perpetual summer, situated at the foot of the mountains where all the fruits of the earth appeared to flourish. These pioneers, found gold, indeed, for they established the great orange orchards of California.

At first the orchardists realized exorbitant prices for their fruit, and the fruit was sold at a profit of 100 per cent. But soon oranges fell to a more normal level, the gradually increasing transportation facilities, and the enlarged markets, and brought in splendid returns for the increasing crops. The pioneer orchardists in the San Bernardino and San Gabriel valleys were followed by swarms of followers. A colony went out from Indiana to grow the orange in the great valley of the Colorado spread to Pasadena. Sheep grazing lands were transformed into orange orchards; new cities sprang up not merely on the mountain slopes, but in the valleys that flourish today, and finally old towns, like Los Angeles and San Diego, were transformed into great cities of a century and started on a career of progress as marvelous as that of any city in America.

The Washington navel orange, which is now the standard orange of California and famous throughout the world, was brought to the United States from Brazil thirty-two years ago. Two plants were obtained by the Department of Agriculture at Washington; two more, born of these, were first planted in California by Luther C. Tibbitts in 1874. From these two plants have come the most profitable orange groves of California to-day.

And, while the navel orange is the fruit of the groves, the Valencia variety is one of the great humors of life that Tibbitts, the pioneer, subsequently was forced to go to the pearhouses in Florida and in the summerlands of California, and how afterward, the pioneers of the gold fields found it when they had abandoned hope for gold, and how the railroads came pushing through the desert and over the mountains and distributed it through the continent, if such a story could be fully told it would outrival any collection of the wonderful myths of ancient times.

Balked at Thirteen. There will be no floors numbered thirteen in the new skyscraper hotels. They must change their numerical base. When the Gotham was opened a few weeks ago it had a floor bearing the unlucky number, but it has none now. It is now fourteen, impervious to superstition and feared by none.
