Transportation a Factor. "One of the most important factors in the upbuild and development of any city is found in interurban lines. Such projects have accomplished wonders for Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and such cities. There are now four roads from Los Angeles to the coast line, all double-tracked, and two more are projected.

Only Boosting Required. "If the people of this city would only boost as enthusiastically and as consistently as do our coast brethren, our population would double, our riches would triple and the value of our lands would quadruple all within a comparatively few years," asserted Mr. Meeks. "One never hears a coast man say business is poor or make a discouraging remark about his home town. The coast man has demonstrated that to boost means to get business. He has proved that uniform community boosting will do more for a community than any other one thing. One only has to visit the coast cities to realize what public spirit and the boost fever have accomplished. It is everywhere apparent. "Salt Lake is the best inland town in the great west in every way. Salt Lake is the cleanest, healthiest and prettiest city I have visited. The same may be said of the state. Both have been long neglected. Utah is one of the last states of the union in which values can be found so low, with inevitable development right in sight to take them soaring upward.
