

Family Which Will Occupy the White House After March 4, 1913

Directorship in the Y. W. C. A. interfered with her termiduchon pleasures. During the Baltimore convention Miss Jessie was the most active person in the Wilson family. She made a chart by means of which she kept track of the change in ballots and their effect. Before her nomination became a certainty the chart was in great demand by her father.

Miss Eleanor Wilson is an artist and was a student at the Fine Arts academy in Philadelphia. Undoubtedly she will be referred to as the plainest of the daughters, but her friends say that "Nell" is really the most attractive of the trio, only acquaintance of some time is required to appreciate her charms.

Even the mother of these busy young women has an occupation. She was a student in the Art Students league of New York at the time of her engagement to the young Professor Wilson.

After her marriage she painted only in a desultory way until her daughters went away to school, when she took up art again in earnest, and her friends say she is cleverer than many avowed professionals at portrait work and landscape.

With the entire family intently engaged at their favorite pursuits, Washington society leaders are wondering how much time will be left for the usual social gayeties.

In the year 1885 the girl who is to be "first lady in the land" was Miss Ellen Louise Axson of Rome, Ga. Her father was a Presbyterian minister, and Governor and Mrs. Wilson have put in practice in the education of their children these very things he advocated at Princeton university as its president. He allowed the inclinations of his daughters to develop rather than have them guided along the conventional school lines. None of the daughters went to school before she was past 10 years of age.

Governess for Girls.

Mrs. Wilson and her husband directed the early educational steps themselves. When the governor went to Princeton as professor of jurisprudence and political economy, a German governess was employed who instructed the girls in French and German; in consequence they are proficient in both languages.

After the age of ten they all went to a school at Princeton, where they studied until they were ready to go to college.

Mrs. Wilson calls herself the happiest woman in America when she is in Seagirt, because when she is there, if there are no guests to entertain, she can don short skirts, take her canvas and brushes and go to the woods or beach for a morning's sketching, or if art does not appeal to her, put in the daylight hours working in her garden. Then, too, she can have her family with her at Seagirt. The girls are home and so is Mr. Wilson.

World Man's Sphere.

Their home life is ideal. Mrs. Wilson is quoted as saying: "The world is man's sphere, the home is woman's. Do not think this to mean that a wife should not spur her husband on in his vocation. That seems to be the double function of woman—ambition accelerator and mental recreator. A wife should make it her business to see that her husband secures a few hours' mental recreation every day. I think that the American woman as a rule has too many interests at once, thus they draw upon their strength far in excess of what they should keep their health."

Mrs. Wilson and her daughters all make friends readily. They have natural social gifts combined with a broad culture and a diversity of interests. They will introduce a new element into the social life of the national capital. Their ambitions have taken them out into the world and their interests are too varied to be limited to mere social activities, even when they take a diplomatic flavor. In the White house, some work will probably be turned into a studio for Eleanor; Margaret will be practicing arias in another part of the mansion; while Jessie will be delving into sociological problems between afternoon teas and official receptions.

To insure the possession of good hair two things are necessary—reasonable care and the intelligent use of Newbro's Herpicide.

Hair that receives no attention but the daily combing and an occasional shampoo cannot be pretty. Dandruff forms on the scalp, the hair becomes dead, brittle, uneven and falls out. There is an entire lack of the life, luster and snap which is imparted to the hair by proper care and Newbro's Herpicide.

Herpicide kills the germ that causes dandruff, keeps the scalp clean and free from scale. The hair looks alive, ceases to fall out and has a gloss, beauty and luxuriance. Herpicide stops itching almost instantly.
