

CHEVY CHASE LOSES

Metropolitan Club Wins Ball Game, 15 to 9.

GRAND ACROBATIC EXHIBITS

High and Lofly Tumbling by Society Selons the Chief Feature of Shows for Charity—Preston Gibson College Day Form in the Pitcher's Box—Nothing Ever Like It.

Garbed for a Thanksgiving Day football orgy, society sat shivering in the grand stand at the National's baseball grounds yesterday afternoon while thirteen Metropolitan clubmen and nine Chevy Chase clubmen, in summer tan and outgrown college day baseball uniforms, rendered their interpretation of the great national pastime, to the great joy of all beholders, the benefit of the Providence Hospital, and the ultimate defeat of the country club aggregation by a score of 15 to 9.

The indifference of the weather gods to the success of the charitable undertaking as manifested by the biting nor'wester that whistled through the unprotected stand and played havoc with spring millinery and Marcell wares, chilled the enthusiasm of the general public respectfully invited to contribute. Although the grand stand was well filled, it was almost entirely a gathering of smart people. However, a substantial sum was netted for the cause.

It is doubtful if the old grand stand has ever borne the weight of so distinctly outre an assemblage as sat huddled in furs or with upturned coat collars yesterday and laughed or applauded decorously while sons of Washington's best families evorted upon the diamond in alleged athletic combat. From Baron Rosen, Ambassador from Russia, to little Quentin Roosevelt, extremes of dignity and boyish strenuousity, the elite of this city spent the best part of the afternoon at the game.

Never Anything Like It.

They were rewarded by an exhibition of baseball such as is seldom witnessed on these grounds. Not that there were many errors, for the fielders seldom got near enough to a batted ball to make a faux pas of this sort; but in its acrobatic character was the game unique. For instance, there was Reggy Huldekooper, M. F. H. of the Chevy Chase Club, whose terpsichorean and high and lofty tumbling qualifications, as evidenced in his pursuit of the elusive spheroid whenever it came near his stamping ground around third base, was a thing of beauty and a joy forever. "They say he caught one in practice," remarked a fair fan to her as fair neighbor after one of "Reggy's" exceptionally well-executed misses.

From the outset it was apparent that the Metropolitan had the shade over their country cousins, for when the town team took the field in the first inning their strength was disclosed in its near Yale battery composed of Preston Gibson, pitcher, and Ned Mitchell, catcher. "Presty," whose residence is mostly in Chicago, began immediately to show that trickery incurve that made him an almost pitcher of the Yale varsity team years and years ago, and the star of his class team. Backstopped by agile Ned Mitchell, who once wore a Y for his proficiency in this genteel art, the invincible Preston made eleven Chevy Chaseers taste the bitterness that lurks in the throat.

Get the Lead Early.

Heavy stick work on the part of the town clubmen quickly garnered them a nice little lead of 12 to 0 in the first four innings. Captain and Pitcher Bayne, of Chevy Chase, at this juncture held a consultation with Capt. Murray Cobb, of the "Mets," in which it was divulged that the Chevy Chaseers didn't think "Presty" ought to pitch so hard, especially as he is only a nonresident member of the club, and, therefore, more or less "butting in." Word was passed to "Presty" and he promised to be nice and pitch easy ones for a while.

Immediately there came a betterment of the Chevy Chaseers' standing, three runs being gleamed in the fourth and another trio in the fifth, all due, of course, to "Presty's" generous disposition. But after the six tallies had been recorded, Capt. Cobb told his not-quite-college pitcher to tighten up again, with the result that the Chaseers were blanked in the sixth, while the Mets gained one more. But in the seventh the Country Club boys began to get a line on P. Gibson's parabolas and grabbed off another three runs.

Bayne was getting better, and the Chevy Chase team wanted to continue the game for the full nine innings, instead of the seven, as agreed, but the victorious Mets were satisfied to call a truce to their unwonted exertions. The stand by this time was half emptied of its brilliant throng, and, as there seemed to be no prospect of finishing the game before dark, play was abandoned.

WINS MILLEAGE COMPLAINT.

Pittsburg Man Upheld by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

This is the story of a Pittsburg man who made a kick to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and won out on it. The name of the man is Edward Schenck, a well-known civil engineer. He complained to the commission that the Pittsburg and Lake Erie road tore out of their mileage books sixty-eight miles of transportation between Pittsburg and Youngstown, whereas the line is only sixty-four miles long.

Interstate Commerce Commissioner Lane took up the matter with the Pittsburg and Erie. The officials of the system made a survey of the line, and found that Engineer Schenck was right. The Pittsburg and Erie has notified the commission that hereafter, in collecting fares, it will charge passengers for sixty-four miles, instead of sixty-eight miles, between Pittsburg and Youngstown.

FINAL MISSISSIPPI MEETING.

State Society Will Hold Annual Picnic at Great Falls.

Upon invitation of Miss I. L. Duncan and Mrs. M. F. Somervell the final meeting of the year of the Mississippi Society was held in Belcourt Seminary last night. The usual procedure was dispensed with, the only business coming before the society being the selection of Great Falls as the place for the annual picnic, on May 30. W. P. Ramsay was appointed as chairman of a committee to make the necessary arrangements.

A musical and literary programme by the pupils of the seminary followed the business meeting. A piano solo was given by Miss Lillian Hendricks, and vocal solos by Miss Minton, of Mississippi; Miss Meredith, of Ohio; Miss Burke, of South Dakota, and Miss Tunnah, of Arkansas. A scene from the "Merchant of Venice" was presented by Misses Turner and Curry, and recitations, by Miss Moorman and Miss Curry. At the conclusion of the programme a vote of thanks was extended Miss Duncan and Mrs. Somervell, the principals of the seminary.

STEVENS TO APPRAISE ROAD

May Enter Employ of Pennsylvania Railway System.

Former Engineer of Panama Canal Will Put Valuation on Property of Transportation Corporation.

John F. Stevens is to enter the employ of one of the Eastern railroads for the purpose of making a valuation of its property. Mr. Stevens admitted that such a proposition had been made to him, and that he has accepted. It is believed that Mr. Stevens intends to enter the service of the Pennsylvania system.

His engagement to make a study of valuations for one of the big systems is regarded as of great significance, and indicating a purpose on the part of the road to demonstrate that their properties are not overcapitalized. It is believed also that this action is intended to anticipate such action by the government, as the roads see that in the near future the matter of making a government valuation of railroad properties is likely to become an issue, and they desire to know their status and what may be expected when the time comes.

In other words, the roads want to be protected against the possible disposition of government appraisers undervaluing the value of their holdings. Recently one important railroad company in the East indicated to government authorities that it had been converted to the idea of a valuation, and was ready and anxious to have it made by the government. Two reasons are assigned for the railroads taking this view of the matter. One is that they would prefer a single valuation, made uniformly and systematically by the government, rather than a piecemeal valuation by the different States, which is considered certain unless the Federal government does the work.

The other object is that they believe the intrinsic value of their terminals in the large cities will make their total property holdings so valuable that they will be shown actually to be under rather than over capitalized.

MANY SILKS DISPLAYED.

S. Kann's Store Offers Attractions to Shoppers.

An immense purchase of silks from the auction sale of J. Kridel, Sons & Co., one of America's largest silk houses, was quickly taken advantage of by S. Kann, Sons & Co., and the result is some most interesting silk bargains for Monday's shoppers. Many women who are not in a hurry for their spring suits have waited for the first reduction of the big suit department, and a pleasant surprise is that their patience is to be rewarded, as to-morrow presents some most gratifying price offerings in women's high grade silks, that the wise woman will not delay to take advantage of at once.

By the way women were buying last Monday in Kann's big face and embroidery sale one would have thought there would not have been a yard left in the store, but a pleasant surprise is in store for those who were not able to take of the big bargain spread last week, in the offering of more dozen yard pieces.

White goods that in spite of the continuing cold winter season, are eagerly sought after and bought as eagerly as ever, are in the list of to-morrow's good things. Cream white wool goods are enjoying a most phenomenal sale this spring. This is probably due to the cold weather that is very well adapted to the wearing of such goods. One white suit of this character is really a requirement of the fashionable girl's wardrobe.

Blue Panama and some fancy wool goods of our wares are offered to-morrow as a little special bargain. Those who prefer the pretty new silk mixtures have an equally good opportunity to buy some high grade pongees at very good price concessions. And there are some mighty taking wash goods specials for Monday's shoppers.

Vienna Choir Sails To-day.

Vienna, April 20.—Two thousand immigrants will sail from Flumina to-morrow for America on board the steamer Carpathia. The Vienna male choir, which also sails to-morrow, has decided to cancel its concert scheduled for Milwaukee.

GAY SOCIETY ARRAY

Leaders Are Out in Force at Ball Game.

STRIKING COSTUMES WORN

Young Women Sell Score Cards to the Spectators—Theodore, Jr., and Quentin Represent the President's Family—Long List of Distinguished Box Holders—The Costumes.

The President had expected to attend the ball game between the Metropolitan and Chevy Chase clubs yesterday, but was detained at the White House, so that the only members of the Roosevelt family present were young Theodore, Jr., who is still home from Harvard, and little Quentin.

Society girls sold score cards, and the small sons of social leaders carried baskets of peanuts around the crowd. Mrs. Mabel Townsend, Miss Isabelle Huff, Miss Katherine Elkins, Miss Harriet Wardworth, Miss Sanger, and Miss Sheridan were the young women chosen to sell the score cards.

Among the box holders were Senator and Mrs. Elkins, Mrs. Townsend, Mr. and Mrs. Henry May, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Shonts, Count and Countess Seckendorff, Mr. and Mrs. John R. McLean, Mrs. Boardman, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Wallace, Capt. and Mrs. Sumerlin, Senator and Mrs. Hale, the Cuban Minister and Mrs. Quesada, Mrs. Silson, Hutchins, Mr. and Mrs. Huff, Mr. James F. Barbour, the Misses Patten, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Glover, Mrs. Nabuco, Mrs. Cortes, Mrs. Walcott Tuckerman, Mrs. McCartney, the Misses Sutherland, Mrs. Westcott, Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, Mrs. Jennings, the Misses Riggs, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Webb, Mr. F. A. Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery, Mrs. McGee, Mrs. W. B. Hibbs, and the staff of Providence Hospital, the hospital being the beneficiary.

List of Patronesses. The patronesses were Countess Seckendorff, Mrs. Charles Bell, Mrs. Glover, Mrs. James F. Barbour, Mrs. Edward McCauley, Mrs. de Quesada, Mrs. Archibald Hopkins, Mrs. Nabuco, Mrs. Justerand, Miss Townsend, the Misses Patten, Mrs. John R. McLean, Mrs. Anon Mills, Mrs. Chatard, Mrs. Boardman, Mrs. Cotton Smith, Mrs. Hauge, Mrs. Huff, Mrs. Creel, Mrs. White, Miss Sands, Mrs. Hinckley, Mrs. Cortes, the Misses Riggs, Mrs. McCartney, Mrs. Alexander Dupard, Miss Dorsey, Mrs. Gaff, Miss Acosta, Mrs. Lincoln, Mrs. George Howard, Mrs. James F. Mitchell, Mrs. Walcott Tuckerman, and Mrs. Hannis Taylor.

Mrs. D. Percy Hickling had charge of the refreshments, which were sold by a corps of small boys. Mr. and Mrs. Shonts had with them in their box the Russian Ambassador and his daughter, the Baroness Elizabeth Rosen. Mrs. Shonts was out for the first time in several days since her illness. She wore a long sealskin coat and a black hat trimmed with a brown bird. The intrinsic value of their long sealskin coats reaching to the hem of their gowns, Miss Marguerite Shonts' hat was of seal, trimmed with plumes of two shades of blue. Her sister, Miss Theodore, wore a black hat, with a long green plume.

Sealskins in Evidence. In the next box was Mrs. Stilson Hutchins and her brother, Mr. Robert Keeling, who has a studio in London, and Mrs. Stuart Hooker. Mrs. Hutchins wore a sealskin coat over her blue gown and a black hat trimmed with a long electric blue feather, which fell over her hair in the back to the nape of the neck. Mrs. Hooker wore a champagne colored coat with a gray hat trimmed with pink roses.

The Baroness Elizabeth Rosen was in a dark suit with a chinchilla coat with an ermine stole. Her hat was a combination of brown and coral colored ribbons and wings. Miss Mathilde Townsend wore a shepherd's plaid skirt with a black pony jacket and a brown hat trimmed with brown and green quills.

Miss Isabel May also wore a plaid skirt, the colors being a combination of red, brown, and blue. She wore a pony jacket and a brown hat trimmed with a brown bird with touches of burnt orange in the feathers.

Miss Katherine Elkins' gown was a hunter's green cloth, over which she wore a long coat of champagne color and a black hat with straw color, trimmed with dark green and light blue feathers.

Mrs. Henry May was in a long pony coat of white and gray, with a long plume of the same color. Mrs. Ridgely, wife of the Comptroller of the Currency, wore a brown pony coat and a mushroom hat of yellow straw trimmed with brown and yellow roses and daisies.

Mrs. Brownell, wife of Col. Brownell, wore a tan pony coat over her cloth gown, with a gray mushroom hat trimmed with owl's wings.

Miss Collier's Costume. Miss Rebecca Collier, daughter of Mrs. De Witt Talmage, wore a gray and white checked suit, with a hat trimmed with quillings of electric blue velvet ribbon and guinea wigs.

Miss Harriet Wardworth was in a black tailor suit, with which she wore a hat of turquoise velvet trimmed with wings of the same shade.

Mrs. Scott, wife of Senator Scott, wore a dark blue cloth suit with chinchilla fur and a black hat trimmed with a wreath of white roses.

Mme. Quesada wore black, with sables, being in mourning. Miss Louise Maxwell, daughter of Rear Admiral and Mrs. Barker, wore a modish suit of gray cloth with a rose-colored straw hat trimmed with the same shade.

Mrs. Alexander Legare was in black cloth, with a hat trimmed with shades of blue ribbon, forget-me-nots, and roses of pastel pink.

Miss Errol Brown was in black voile over yellow silk, and her hat was of black with a bird of the same color on one side. Miss Mitchell wore a modish cloth, with coat and hat to correspond. Miss Esther Denny's gown was of tan cloth, with which she wore a brown tulle ruche and brown hat.

with feathers of London smoke color. Mrs. Meyer, wife of the Postmaster General, was in a dark cloth suit over which she wore a brown fur coat. Her hat was a small brown one with a wreath of red roses under the chin. The Misses Meyer wore also in dark suits, one wearing a blue hat trimmed with green and blue tulle and a green feather, and the other a brown hat trimmed with red cherries and pink roses. Her coat was a brown pony jacket. Mrs. Hugh Legare wore London smoke with a hat trimmed with brown bird, and her furs were sables.

Mme. Amaral Present. Mme. Amaral, wife of the counselor of the Brazilian Embassy, wore a suit of gray cloth and a hat of brown, trimmed with spreading wings of green. Miss Goodhina, wife of the consul, wore a blue cloth, her hat being trimmed with ribbon of shades of electric blue.

Miss Patten wore a long brown pony coat with a brown hat trimmed with pheasant feathers in burnt orange. Miss Claggett's gown was of checked gray and white cloth, with which she wore an old rose hat trimmed with feathers of different shades of rose. Miss Pauline Morgan, niece of Mrs. Pinchot, accompanied Miss Maxwell and was, of course, in black, being in mourning.

Mr. Brun, the Danish Minister, was in the audience, as was Signor Centurini of the Italian Embassy, and Senator Pulido.

NEWS CUT SHORT FOR BUSY READERS. Officers and members of Farragut Relief Corps, No. 5, will give an entertainment and social on Tuesday, April 23, at their hall, 216 Pennsylvania avenue southeast.

Frank L. Carroll, who was arrested in Norfolk, Va., on a bench warrant, was yesterday committed to jail by Justice Stafford in default of bail. Carroll is indicted for forgery.

Mrs. Charlotte Armstrong Falls, by her will dated December 18, 1892, and filed for probate yesterday, leaves her entire estate to her husband, Robert W. Falls, who is also appointed executor.

Myrtle W. Davis, through her attorneys, J. A. Maedel and M. Strasburger, yesterday began suit against Edgar E. Davis for absolute divorce, alleging infidelity on his part. The couple were married August 27, 1891, at Villisca, Iowa, and there are no children.

The application of Gillis P. Haynes for wholesale liquor license at 23 M street southeast yesterday refused by the excise board. Rev. Walden Myer, of St. Matthew's Episcopal Chapel, and W. M. Ramsey, of the Bruen Mission, opposed the granting of the license.

Because of numerous complaints relative to their capacity, Col. W. C. Haskell, sealer of weights and measures, will soon begin an inspection of the large milk cans used in the delivery of milk and cream to the dealers. Many of these cans, it is stated, contain a half gallon less than the standard quantity. The inspection will be made at the several milk depots.

LIGHTNING-BUG MATCHES.

The Boy Genius Who Invented a New Firecracker Scheme.

In Washington, D. C., lives a sunny-haired, blue-eyed lad, of three and a half years, who undoubtedly possesses the inventive genius of a genius. His name is Donald, and he is the son of an inventor, an Edison, Tesla, or a Marconi, and in the scientific world may be heard from advantageously at some future day. On July 4 last, being early awakened by the explosion of the ubiquitous fire cracker, he quickly brushed the "sleepy dust" from his youthful eyelids, sprang from his little white bed with a bound, and "wanted to be jessed right away," so he could go outdoors and make his cracker pop, too. Accordingly, the little "genius" began to "jess" and "jess," and out he scampered. His indulgent parents had previously prepared for this long-anticipated pleasure of the enthusiastic hopeful, and all day long he was to be found loyally on the firing line.

The twilight shadows were deepening, yet the "spirit of '76" was still undaunted. He impromptu his father for more matches, with which to set off the few remaining bunches, but the fond parent strongly protested, and, furthermore, "Donald, you must go in to bed now; you are very tired."

Here the father's attention was diverted, and when a few moments later he turned to take the reluctant urchin into the house, lo! Donald was no where to be seen. His mother, who had just been summoned for search, and all was in a state of chaotic anxiety. Why, where was Donald?

Their efforts unrewarded, hysteria's fangs fastened upon the female members of the household, and the alarm was electrically sent throughout the neighborhood that Donald had mysteriously disappeared. Hither and yon anxious hearts and feet were resolved into an investigation, and every nook was cautiously explored.

"Suddenly a shout of unlimited lung power, which Stentor himself might envy, rent the powder-scented air. Here he is! Here he is! Loud enough, in a remote corner of the rear yard, down on his little knees, bending way over, and completely self-absorbed, was the little rascal. Being denied the coveted matches, a sudden inspiration illumined his receptive brain. Seeing the "lightning-bugs," with their "firefly" lamps, he had caught a handful of them, and was rubbing their phosphorescent little bodies against the firecrackers in a persistent, but futile attempt, to "pop 'em."

His father, fearing he might frighten him, approached gently, saying: "My son, what are you doing?" Turning around, the boy's face radiantly triumphant, "I see just how a firecracker goes off. Don't you see some matches wis wings on. He's better you is."

Franklin and Morse chained the lightning. Edison evolved the communicative cylinder. Marconi bridged the "wireless," and further down the centuries, who knows but Donald will yet evolve an explosion by affixing a lightning-bug and a fire cracker?

ALICE MARIAN SMES. Plans for the erection of the $250,000 addition to the McKinley Manual Training School were discussed yesterday at a conference in the District Building between P. M. Hughes, assistant superintendent of public schools, J. A. Channing, director of the McKinley Manual Training School; Dr. C. F. Myers, principal of the Manual Training School, and Commissioners Macfarland and Biddle, Building Inspector Asford, and James L. Norris, the architect. A board of education was yesterday requested to submit its views concerning certain details, after which the actual work on the construction of the building will begin.

CRITICISED BY OLNEY

Former Secretary of State Rebukes Administration.

RECALL CALIFORNIA INCIDENT

Declares in Speech Before American Society of International Law That Our Interference in Santo Domingo Was Unwarranted—Organization Re-elects Its Officers and Closes.

Richard Olney, of Massachusetts, attacked the policy of the administration in acquiring the Panama Canal Zone and the settlement of the debt of Santo Domingo yesterday morning at the concluding meeting of the American Society of International Law. His attack was made during the discussion of the "Second Hague Conference and the Development of International Law as a Science," and created something of a sensation among his auditors.

Mr. Olney led up to his outspoken opinion by discussing the Japanese-California incident in a general way. He found nothing in the Monroe doctrine that warranted such an interference in the internal affairs of Santo Domingo as the coercion of that republic into the payment of foreign debts.

The course of the United States in the matter, he said, was vexatious, burdensome, and dangerous, and was not essential to the welfare of the American people. It was simply making a debt collecting agency of this government, and he thought that it would retard, rather than advance, the progress of international law, which, he said, is not founded on the will of Caesar, but on justice. He also denounced the acquisition of the Panama Canal Zone by the United States, without compensation, as a direct violation of the international law, it having been practically appropriated by this government because it was the stronger.

Delegate Foster Pessimistic. John W. Foster, who is one of the American delegates to the Second Hague Peace Conference, as well as the first, spoke of the work of the former, and was rather pessimistic as to the results that would grow out of the coming meeting. The proposition for the limitation of armaments, Mr. Foster said, had failed at the first conference owing to the opposition of Germany and other nations.

Russia, who called both meetings, was now the principal object, although he acknowledged that under the changed conditions she was not without some justification. The outlook was, therefore, somewhat discouraging, but he had some hope that the proposal made by President Roosevelt that a limitation be placed on the size of battle ships would be accepted as a step in the right direction.

Mr. Foster referred with respect to the fact that although the policy of mediation had been adopted by the first conference, there had been no attempt on the part of the signatory powers to mediate between Russia and Japan when the war between them was pending. He thought that the conflict might have been averted had Great Britain, the United States, Germany, and France offered their services, although he recognized the fact that the differences between Japan and Russia were well nigh insoluble without resort to arms.

Mr. Foster said he hoped the coming conference would strengthen the arbitration provision adopted by the last conference by making compulsory arbitration for the signers to submit at least certain questions to a commission, as was done in the Dugger Bank incident. Now it was purely voluntary, and some countries, therefore, somewhat discouraging, but he had some hope that the proposal made by President Roosevelt that a limitation be placed on the size of battle ships would be accepted as a step in the right direction.

Officers Re-elected. Dr. Thomas E. Holland, professor of civil law at Oxford University, and Prof. H. Lammasche, of the upper house of the Austrian parliament, were elected honorary members of the society. The officers were re-elected for the ensuing year, including Eiliu Root, as president; Chief Justice Fuller, Justices Brewer and Day, Secretary Taft, Andrew Carnegie, Joseph H. Choate, John W. Foster, Judge George Gray, Former Attorney General John W. Griggs, Judge W. W. Morrow, of California, Hon. Richard Olney, and Secretary Oscar S. Straus, as vice presidents, and an executive council of twenty-three members.

Vice President Straus, who presided at yesterday's session, declared that money was the most important contraband, and he hoped the second Hague conference, if it were unable to agree upon disarmament, would at least bring about a truce of money to belligerents by the bankers of a neutral nation, a hostile act.

Noted Speakers at Dinner.

With the Secretary of State, president of the new organization; the British Ambassador, Richard Olney, and Gen. Horace Porter among the speakers, the dinner bringing the convention to a close took place last evening in the red parlors of the New Willard.

Secretary Root presided, with Ambassador Bryce on his right and Secretary Straus on the other side. Others at the speaker's table were Mr. Buchanan, Assistant Secretary Bacon, Justice Harlan, Secretary Garrison, Commissioner Macfarland, Postmaster General von Meyer, Chief Justice Stanton J. Peelle, Gen. Horace Porter, Admiral Stockton, Rear Admiral Sperry, and Mr. Woodward. Joseph H. Choate, former Ambassador to England, who was to have been one of the speakers, was unable to attend, having been called to New York during the afternoon.

The guests at the dinner were the following: Charles B. Aldrich, Prof. Amos, Chandler B. Anderson, Allison V. Armour, Henry B. Ames, Justice Anderson, Judge Atkinson, The Secretary of Agriculture, Judge Barney, R. Barnhart, William Barnes, Judge Booth, A. B. Brown, Samuel J. Barrows, Joseph C. Baldwin, Ira Bairdman, G. S.
