GOOD WILL OCCUPIED

Camp Opened to Delight
Hundreds of Children.

SCRAMBLE TO REACH PLACE

Lively Delegation of Youngsters Keeps Mothers, Secretary Weller, and His Associates Busy on the Trip—Rompings Begins Instantly After Arrival—To Last Two Weeks.

Camp Good Will opened for the season yesterday, and many little hearts were made glad through the anticipation of two full weeks of yesterday's pleasures.

Little barefoot figures tripped over the green grass and romped and played to their hearts' content, while tired and careworn mothers, many of them with infants in their arms, sat in the new assembly tent and rocked to and fro in the cool breeze, while the young women volunteers were keeping house in earnest, making beds, watching the little ones, and superintending the preparation of a big feed that was spread in a brand new refectory.

The vacationers, who were made up of the needy families of Georgetown, congregated for the start at the West End headquarters at No. 1208 Third-street.
They were met by Secretary Weller and his corps of assistants, who registered the names and took care of the other preliminaries. It was hard to keep the little ones in restraint while this was being done. Their young minds were conjured up rosy pictures of the green sands and playthings and toys, that had them all in a quiver to be off.

Maggie Describes Wonders.

Little Maggie McGhee had been there before, and she was the center of a big group that stood around and listened open-mouthed to her accounts of adventures and good things there. This revel of anticipation passed unnoticed by one little individual, however.

"Huh," he said, in disgust, "the only time you get me there is when I'm dead." This sally met with resentment from the rest of his circle, and Dick, as his play-fellows called him, was designated "struck-up," and gently rough-housed, until parental authority came down with a resounding smack on the projecting portion of several little tumbled bodies. Dick was asked angrily if he were going. He countered with "I dunno." This met with a sterner request for his name, and he scramped away with the parting shot, "Look in the directory!"

Everybody had a bundle when the cavalade started up Third-street to board a car. The motorman put the brake on with an astonished look. There was a mad scamper for seats, and parental injunctions went unheeded. The car was taken by storm, while grown-ups and their conductors stood by. When they were all in the conductor facetiously asked Mr. Weller if he was from Utah or a candidate for Presidential commendation. Mr. Weller responded that they were all his; but Maggie Wolf, sitting next to him, exclaimed:
"No, we ain't. I don't belong to him.
There's my mother over there!"

The car-storming performance was repeated at the junction at Ninth and F streets, and again when the change was made for Brightwood. Once arrived at Brightwood, little Maggie, in the pride of her knowledge, pointed out the way.

Follow Her Lead.

Following her lead, the little band raced uphill and down along the road that leads to the camp. Gleeful shouts greeted the first view of the white tents, where Maggie impressively announced was the place. Secretary Weller and his party, loaded down with bundles, were left way behind. The children made themselves at home without a moment's hesitation.

Shoes and stockings were discarded, and little toes dug gleefully into Mother Earth, where that recent rain had left mud puddles. Hair that was brushed neatly down when the start was made became tousled, and many little "best suits" suffered severely before they could be rescued. Exploring parties pried into everything on the farm, even the trash pile, and rescued several cast-off toys.
Some of the smaller members played in the sand box, and the bigger boys and girls took possession of the swings after a lively argument.

Meanwhile, Secretary Weller and his party had arrived. Families were assigned to tents and made to feel at home by the volunteers, who had made up the beds, of, rather, cots, and otherwise put everything in order for their reception.
Among the busiest at the camp were Miss Louise Stanton, one of the leaders in charity work in Georgetown; Mrs. Giles Rafter, Mrs. E. H. Bushie, and Miss New-Deardoff, a graduate from the University of Michigan; Ann Arbor, her mother, and Miss Catherine Pitts, a Washington girl and graduate of the Washington Cathedral School. Many other girl graduates have tendered their services for two-week periods throughout the summer.

Location Is Ideal.

Camp Good Will is in many respects an ideal spot. It is on a high hill with an excellent view, plenty of shade, and a perpetual breeze. Many improvements have been made since the closing of the camp last year. Noticeable among these is the new dining-room, built as an addition to the farm house, and a big assembly tent for use during wet weather. There are nearly two score big tents, accommodating ten persons each. The lives of the sojourners there will be in every sense out of doors, and it is expected much benefit will be derived. The tents for boys and for girls are separated by a long lane, but where an entire family goes out they are all put in one tent.

Secretary Weller says there are a great many things needed yet to make the camp an ideal one. He mentioned a long list of things that are absolute necessities, such as furniture, and said there was also a shortage of toys and magazines and reading matter.

It was stated at headquarters yesterday that the contributions for the camp and other summer outings work of the Associated Charities are coming in generous number. It is hoped that $5,000 will be raised before the usual summer exodus.

Case Bitterly Arraigned.

PROSECUTOR GETS SARCASTIC

District Attorney Baker Says "Get There Quick Club" Not as Swift Now as Before Conspiracy Was Discovered—Defense Gets Disappointment—Arguments Close To-day.

Edwin S. Holmes, Jr., on trial for alleged conspiracy in connection with government cotton statistics, yesterday received from District Attorney Baker a bitter and sarcastic arraignment, in the course of which he said that if the testimony offered by the government was true, and he believed it was, Holmes, Haas, and Peckham were no better than, and probably not as good as, men who by violence would deprive people of their property. He ridiculed the idea of Holmes selling to Lewis C. Van Riper, the government's chief witness, what he termed "a hole in the ground" for $23,000, a mine which, Mr. Baker said, at the utmost has not cost more than $500, and he asked the jury if in their opinion a "shrewd New Yorker like Van Riper could have been made a sucker in such a deal."

On behalf of Holmes, Attorney Wharton E. Lester said his respects to Van Riper, whose testimony on the stand, he stated, was a tissue of lies. Everything that Mr.
Baker said about Holmes, said Mr. Lester, was applicable also to Van Riper, and that if there had been a conspiracy, Van Riper was just as much a conspirator as Holmes, Haas, or Peckham.

Defense Somewhat Disappointed.

The defense was somewhat disappointed over Justice Stafford's announcement that he would grant them but four of the seventen prayers offered. The justice's comments on prayer No. 6, which he declined to grant, were significant. This prayer, in brief, asks that the jury draw no presumption from the failure of the defense to produce Haas or Peckham as witnesses. Justice Stafford said that these two men chiefly must know the truth or falsity of the story that Holmes told on the stand.

"If there was a conspiracy," said Justice Stafford, "they must know, and if there was no conspiracy, and Holmes is innocent, as he maintains, they are the two men in all the world who can support his story."

Justice Stafford added that this statement applied equally to Theodore H.
Price, the New York cotton broker, whose name was frequently mentioned in Van Riper's testimony.

In refusing a supplemental prayer offered by the defense that the jury be told that Haas and Peckham would have been arrested had they come here, Justice Stafford said that this was no reason for their not testifying; that in this case their only excuse could have been that the testimony they gave might incriminate them.

Prayers Granted by Court.

Among the prayers granted by Justice Stafford is that evidence introduced in the case, while tending to prove that Holmes and his co-defendants derived large proceeds from speculations in cotton, is to be considered by the jury only in so far as it may tend to prove that Holmes is guilty, as charged in the indictment, and that the defendant is not charged with having conspired to have a definite prearranged figure in cotton crop.

The other prayers granted were that the defendant was presumed to be innocent, until proven guilty; that the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, and to give consideration to the previous good character of the defendant.

District Attorney Sarcastic.

Comptroller Attorney Baker sarcastically referred to the "Get There Quick Club," composed of Holmes, Haas, and Peckham, this arraignment having been given to the trio by Peckham while they were at Atlantic City in 1904.

"Peckham, the man who got there quick," said Mr. Baker, "has not gotten here quick, nor has Haas. They are not as quick as before this conspiracy was discovered."

"Reputation," said Mr. Baker, "is what the world thinks of a man until he is found out. Holmes' reputation was all right until he was caught defrauding the United States; until he was caught stealing and robbing from the people of the United States; until he was caught putting in a safe-deposit box his ill-gotten gains."

"Honest men do not come down from New York and bring $40,000 and put it into a safe-deposit box. Honest men get drifts, but thieves and robbers hide money."

Makes Technical Argument.

Mr. Lester followed Mr. Baker in a technical argument touching the legal points of the case mostly. He said the question was whether certain men agreed to do certain things. He said that if the government had acted fairly in the matter and believed they had a case against Holmes, they should have indicted him for malfeasance in office. But instead of this, it brought in an indictment charging conspiracy, and on such an indictment it was possible to open up a breach for the admission of testimony which under any other indictment it would be impossible to have accepted.

Attorney Worthington will make the closing argument for the defense, and Morgan H. Beach will close the case on behalf of the government. It is expected that Justice Stafford will complete his charge and that the case will go to the jury by 2 o'clock to-day.
