RED MEN ENTERTAIN

Chippewa Indians in Costume at Cosmos Club.

GIVE GREAT MEDICINE DANCE

Illustrate Notable Lecture Given by Miss Frances Densmore on "The Music of the Chippewa"—Play Tumtum and Rattles, Sing and Dance in Paint, Feathers, Moccasins, &c.

Miss Frances Densmore, of Red Wing, Minn., lectured before the Anthropological Society last night in the Assembly Hall of the Cosmos Club.

Having been actively engaged in the study of Indian music for the past thirteen years, Miss Densmore was particularly well equipped to give a vivid description of the intricacies of the peculiar music of the Chippewas.

"The Music of the Chippewa," was the subject of the lecture. In addition to the discourse, Miss Densmore gave, three full-fledged Chippewa Indians, who happened to be in Washington, provided her hearers with practical demonstrations of songs and dances. There were also photograph reproductions of typical Indian songs.

Indians Are Real Thing.

Attired in Indian native dress, with paint, feathers, beads, moccasins, and wampum, the Chippewas—Ga-ga-sin-de-be, or Wolf; Wa-we-ye-kom-ig, or Round World, and Ma-ing-ans, or Small Head, with tumtum and rattles, went through their characteristic girations while singing.

The Indians are delegates to Washington for the Chippewas, representatives of the tribe before the United States government to secure land claims filed by the tribe. They belong to the White Earth Reservation, in the northern part of Minnesota.

In their native tongue, they are known as Ojibways, and are offsprings of the great Algonquin stock, one of the nations that filled most of the northern part of the United States two centuries ago. They then inhabited Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Kentucky, and even North Carolina.

Miss Densmore told of how she came to study the Indian music, and as a background described the land of the Chippewas "the land of pine trees, lakes, and little hills." She then introduced the human element, bringing in the real Indians and describing the natives and their habits, after which she sang a wigwam song, a medicine dance, and played on their tumtum and rattles.

Great Medicine Song.

A great medicine song was given and described by Miss Densmore, just as given last summer when she witnessed the death ceremonies for Flat Mouth, a Chippewa chief. Love songs, children's songs, prairie songs, war songs, and pony songs were run off on the phonograph.

"One characteristic feature of the Indian songs," said Miss Densmore, "is that they drop the minor third, thus giving a minor tone. The thinking of the scale is turned down. The Greeks all thought their scales downward. Rhythm is evident only by close analysis.

"The tumtum is the typical instrument. It has a resonance that is gotten from no other instrument. I have one of my own that when sounded can be heard for twelve miles. The sound of the tumtum does not seem loud when close to the ear, but it has that freak of acoustics of carrying far.

"The grand medicine lodge of the Indians is similar to masonry, and has all of the characteristics of it. There are eight degrees in the grand lodge of the Chippewas. Before he takes the last degree he must have gone through the seven temptations of man."

Diagrams were drawn to show the plan of the grand medicine lodge, with its seven temptations, represented by zigzag lines, or tangents, on which the Indian man was apt to go off, and ruin his prospects of completing the eight degrees of the lodge.

Obligations Upon Initiative.

Due respect to old age, faithful fulfillment of religious rites, courage, and piety had to be lived up to before the candidate was eligible to the distinction of being called a man. Even if he smiled during a medicine dance or any solemn religious ceremony he had yielded to one of the seven temptations and would have to reckon with his gods.

"Certain requirements," said Miss Densmore, "in the ceremony of preparing for the Grand Medicine Lodge cause the Indians to get to be expert jugglers, and almost as skillful as Buddhists. The lodge is secret, the eighth degree is particularly mysterious. I have been suggested as a member by one of the Chippewas."

As a demonstration of how the Indians expressed themselves, Rev. Joseph Gilliland, a missionary among the Chippewas for twenty-two years, interpreted a speech made by one of the Indians.

Ales Hrdlicka, president of the Anthropological Society, thanked Miss Densmore for her interesting talk. Miss Alice Fisher, a member of the society, and a student of the Indian and his music, also made a speech of thanks.

She and Miss Densmore are now connected with the Ethnology Bureau of the government and are making researches among the Indians of Minnesota.

Gov. Guild Makes Denial.

Among the callers at the White House yesterday was Gov. Guild, of Massachusetts. He arrived just as the Cabinet was assembling, but as respects to the President, and departed in the direction of the War Department. The governor said there was no truth in the stories that he had been approached by the Taft forces to become the running mate of the Secretary of War in the coming campaign.
