MUST HAVE MUSIC TO DO GOOD WORK

Salvationists Protest Against Police Edict.

ADJUTANT WISEMAN TALKS

She Says Move to Deprive Army of Its Music, and Collections Means an End to Its Work, if Successful.

"Our work in this city in the cause of Christianity, in the broadest acceptance of the term, must cease if the courts decide that the police have a right to forbid us to use musical instruments in our services and to make collections."

This constitutes the opinion of Mrs. Wiseman, adjutant of the local branch of the Salvation Army, with headquarters in Pennsylvania avenue, between Ninth and Tenth streets, with regard to the action of the police on Monday night, when they placed the Salvationists under arrest.

Adjutant Wiseman said that the voluntary collections at the outdoor and barracks services are the whole support of the local post and its officers. Out of its proceeds the officers receive their meager salaries, the rent for the barracks, or meeting hall, and the living rooms of the adjutant and her family are defrayed, and if there is anything left over, which is nearly always the case, some deserving poor family gets the benefit thereof.

Long Service at Capital. "The Salvation Army has been stationed twenty-three years in this city," said the militant woman preacher, "and everybody, everywhere, knows by this time of the good accomplished by the army for the poor and the destitute. The police in other cities tried to stop the Salvation Army from beating the drum during the service and from taking up collections. We won everywhere, and we expect to win in this city, because we are in the right."

"I cannot account for this unexpected action on the part of the police authorities, unless we are made to suffer for the mistakes of other organizations which also go out in the streets and hold prayer meetings, accompanied by instrumental and vocal solos, and take up collections. There are a number of such organizations in this city, and they should be driven out of town by the police."

Wants Others Driven Out. "One of these organizations, I believe, had its permit for holding outdoor services withdrawn by the police, and yet its female members, gathered somewhat after the fashion of the Salvation Army, go from saloon to saloon every night soliciting money. It has been reported to me again and again, and I believe my information to be correct. Only recently a hunchbacked organization was expelled from Pittsburg by the police of that city, after evidence had been adduced that young girls employed by the organization led improper lives and that the leaders of the organization were aware of the fact."

"There is still another unformed organization in this city, the head of which, or general, as he calls himself, used to be connected with the Salvation Army. He was expelled, and under no circumstances could he ever again become affiliated with our work."

"It is more than likely that complaints against these people were made and that the police, in order to stop their nefarious work, pounced down on the righteous as well."

Will Ignore Police Attitude. "We intend to continue our outdoor meetings, as usual, with drum and other music, and intend to accept voluntary contributions. The drum in these many years has had a most useful career. It has called thousands and thousands of idlers and sinners to the place of worship and saved their souls. Many men have been called from the ways of vice by the beating of the drum, to listen to the words of love and advice and comfort and hope, as given by our trained men and women."

Referring to the money collected, which flows into the treasury of the Salvation Army posts, Adjutant Wiseman said that every cent is accounted for and that the books are open to public inspection.

"Our books are regularly audited," said Mrs. Wiseman, "by officers specially appointed by headquarters, and there is absolutely no chance for any ill use of the funds, if there was any desire to make such use of them."

Army to Have a Hearing. Maj. Barter, of Baltimore, divisional superintendent of the Southern district of the Salvation Army, arrived in Washington last night to take charge of the matter.

Commissioner West, discussing the question, said yesterday that the Commissioners would give the various groups bands a hearing before they are prosecuted in the Police Court. A day will be set some time within the next week or ten days, and the cases will be heard by Rev. D. Harding, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, and canon of the Cathedral Foundation, said yesterday that he was always sorry to see an agency for good and noble work being discontinued in this city. Referring to the work of the Salvation Army, Canon Harding said:

"I am not thoroughly familiar with their work, but I believe they reach that class of poor and needy which no other church reaches. They do good, and I trust that everything will right itself, so they can continue their work unmolested. I see in the papers that the American Salvation Army was driven out of Pittsburg by the police. Is there a branch of the American Salvation Army in this city?"

Dr. Hannan Praises Salvationists. Rev. Eugene A. Hannan, rector of St. Martin's Church, North Capitol and T streets, is outspoken in his praise of the good work accomplished by the Salvation Army. He said:

"They feed the poor and clothe the naked and help those whom no other church reaches. I myself am a regular contributor to their works of charity in a small way. I should be very sorry if their work were to be interfered with in any way, or if such a small thing as the beating of a drum or the taking up of a collection should be made an excuse to prevent them from going on with their work."

"Cardinal Manning was very much in favor of the Salvation Army, and everybody knows that the Salvation Army has been an agency for good wherever it has settled down for business. It has my sympathy and best wishes."

Other ministers of the gospel of various denominations expressed themselves in similar terms of praise of the work of the Salvation Army, and hoped that there is no danger of any serious movement against its continuing its ministrations.

CAN RAISE G. P. O. WAGES. Comptroller's Decision Causes Rejoicing in the Big Printery.

According to a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, Public Printer Leech has the right to pay machine operators, electrotypers, and stereotypers a wage greater than 50 cents an hour.

When it became known that it will not be necessary for the Public Printer to apply to Congress to increase the pay of the machine operators there was much rejoicing in the big printery.

Several changes were made in the location of the administrative offices on the second floor of the G. P. O. building yesterday.

CITY WAS MENACED BY CONFLAGRATION

Fourth Fire Could Not Have Been Couped With.

CHIEF BELT HAS SOLUTION

Macfarland Backs Him in Proposing High Pressure Service Main for Business District, Leaving Engines Free to Protect Outlying Sections, Congress Anathematic in Matter.

If a fourth serious fire had broken out in a distant part of the city on Monday night, while three large blazes were raging almost simultaneously in the downtown district, it would have had free and uninterrupted play for a long time before any part of the fire department could have given aid, according to a statement made by Chief William T. Belt, of the fire department, last night.

When the entire department was fighting downtown, the outlying, thickly settled, and valuable residential district was absolutely without protection. Had a fire broken out then it might have swept on unhindered and caused thousands of dollars' worth of damage.

The reason for this condition of affairs is that the force and equipment of the District fire department is not of sufficient size to cope with all contingencies which might arise. Chief Belt has at his command at present 19 steam engine companies, 8 trucks, 3 chemical engine companies, and 1 fire boat. With this small array he is obliged to protect the whole of the city and suburbs, wherein are involved the lives of some 315,000 people, and millions of dollars' worth of public and private property.

Firemen Had Hard Fight. Owing to the fierceness of the three fires on Monday night, every fire company was called out to aid in the fight. It was only with the greatest difficulty and hard work by the firemen that they were able to down these fires, which, fortunately, were not far apart.

The solution of the problem, which will give protection to all parts of the residence section in all emergencies, and far better service in the business district, where the greatest losses are sustained in case of fire, is the installation of a high-pressure water system.

Chief Belt said that with this system he could give a demonstration that would show that with it he could do away with the use of engines within the prescribed area of high pressure, could distribute the engines for the best protection of the residence section, and give better protection to the business center.

Congress Let Bill Die. For the introduction of the system the Commissioners prepared a bill which was introduced in Congress some eight years ago, and have fought for it ever since, but without avail. The plan is to law 36-inch high-pressure water mains, connected with the reservoir at Fort Reno, in a district approximately bounded by First street, I street, Eighteenth street, and B street northwest, within the limits of which lie the valuable business section and many public buildings.

"With the pressure system obtained, the chief says, and could throw as many as eighty streams of water within an area of 700 or 800 feet, and could make one fire plug do nearly the work of eight engines."

Thus the business interests would gain far better protection, and the engines taken out of that section would go to protect the outlying parts of the city, which now, in the case of any large conflagration, are practically left helpless.

Chief Belt was very positive in saying that the District badly needs better fire protection.

Object Lesson, Says Macfarland. The Commissioners are heartily in favor of the plan of the chief of the fire department, and will continue to do all that is in their power to have Congress appropriate the necessary funds for the installation of the new system. On the subject, Commissioner Macfarland said yesterday:

"We had a striking object lesson in the three fires Monday night of the imperative necessity for a high-pressure special fire-protection service for the heart of the city, which the Commissioners have been recommending to Congress for the past eight years, and which would cost only $750,000. I wish every member of the Congressional appropriations committees could have seen the conditions last night, and I hope that all the tax payers will directly support the Commissioners in pressing this matter next winter."

"The plain fact is, that if another large fire had occurred anywhere outside of the center of the city, the fire department could not have coped with it, and we should have had a great conflagration, with loss of life as well as of property. The whole strength of the department was engaged, and at the third fire all the men and the horses were at the limit of their power."

Horses Were Worn Out. "I saw the horses come in with the apparatus, nearly exhausted. All the rest of the city and all the suburbs were unprotected; nothing else could have been done. The work of the fire department was, as usual, of the best character. But we cannot protect the life and property of the widespread District of Columbia without a high-pressure special protection system of water mains, which would be equal to forty engines."

"The first cost of the water mains from the Fort Reno reservoir, 45 feet above sea level and seven miles from the heart of the city, which would give us gravity pressure to throw water from the hydrants over the highest buildings, would be the chief cost, the maintenance being comparatively small. Our people have not been fully alive to the necessity."

"Monday night showed, fortunately without loss of time or the placing of a bet, that not only the business men in the heart of the city, but every citizen throughout the District of Columbia, is directly interested in having the high-pressure fire protection service. Elsewhere it is being introduced, and we ought not to lag behind."

Where Congress is Derelict. "The only reason we have not secured the system is because so many other large improvements have been making, and Congress has not adopted the Commissioners' plan of distinguishing between extraordinary improvements and current expenditures and appropriating for the former separately, but each year instead has limited the appropriations by the revenues of the year, lumping together the extraordinary and the current appropriations."

THE WASHINGTON BOARD OF TRADE

The following is the text of the address of Mr. Aldis B. Browne, on behalf of the Washington Board of Trade, upon the occasion of the dedication of the new District Building, July 4, 1908:

"The day we celebrate, and the occasion we celebrate bear close and happy relation. Had there been no Independence Day, this splendid structure would have no existence, nor the District of Columbia municipal being. Because there was an Independence Day a century ago—aye, a century and an added generation ago—we are here to-day engaged in these exercises. For when the bells of Philadelphia rang to proclaim liberty throughout the land, not only of this nation then new born, but the foundation of the day was laid for this structure of this day."

"And when the new nation discarded the original articles of confederation, which some historians have called 'a rope of sand,' and for a more perfect union adopted the Federal Constitution, which Gladstone declared to be the 'greatest instrument ever struck from the brain of man,' there was of need the provision put therein that this great Capital, as the seat of Federal government, should be located upon ground subject only to the sovereignty of the Federal government."

"Before the civil war our local affairs were under municipal control, through mayors and common councils elected in the cities of Washington and Georgetown. After the civil war had made us a part of the great Republic, the meaning of the word 'Federal' was the meaning of the word 'National,' and the National Capital caught the spirit of that marvelous development which has since that time, and since the day of the creation of the present form of government some two decades ago, we passed from an elective to an appointive system, we of the District of Columbia, by the very nature of our institutions, still believed in some form of representative organization."

"Hence it was that the committee of 100 citizens came together, as of common purpose, to adjust the relations between the national government and the citizens and tax payers of the District. That matter being happily settled, and on just basis, there came, by logical sequence, the creation of the Washington Board of Trade, formed, as its by-laws declare, 'for the consideration of and action upon matters concerning commerce, prosperity, and advancement of the material interests of the National Capital and the dissemination of information relating thereto. It shall give special attention to the promotion of public improvements.'"

"The membership of the Board of Trade is in no manner exclusive. It invites and has among its membership men of all callings—professional, commercial, and otherwise—who are interested in the advancement of the material interests of our people of the District. During the nearly twenty years of the board's existence it has sought to aid the development of the National Capital in all proper ways. Claiming no exclusive accomplishment, it has given the best time, thought, and energy of its members to the realization of those things which make for the health, happiness, and physical comfort of all of our people. This is neither a plea nor the place to enumerate in detail all that the board has thus aided in accomplishing. Suffice it to say that at every point of public interest or public improvement, its united voice has been heard urging legislation which would produce, as it has produced, our remarkable advancement to the present hour, including the procurement of the splendid structure we are here to-day to dedicate."

"This, then, is the meaning of the Board of Trade's relation to this occasion. Both as individuals and as an organization, we rejoice with you that our District Building, and is no longer a tenant of a building held in private ownership. The building, as you see it before you, is a veritable poem in architecture, commanding the admiration of all who view it for the mind and hand which planned it. It is a source of peculiar pride also that it has been constructed by one of our own citizens—a member of our Board of Trade—and a man whose name is the synonym of integrity and ability in his chosen calling. All honor to-day to James L. Parsons, its builder. We need no assurance that in its frame and structure, honesty in every part is surely to be found."

"We rejoice with you that our District Building is located upon this great avenue, which for all the years of the past has been, as it will be in all the years of the future, the very center of all that visibly demonstrates our great and increasing strength and power as a nation."
