BAKER WINS SUIT AGAINST WARNER

District Attorney Awarded Ten Thousand Dollars.

RESULT OF ADVERTISEMENT

Chief Justice Claiborne Decides that Defendant's Writings Implied the Plaintiff Had Received Money from Bookmakers—Jury Deliberates an Hour—Verdict is Unanimous.

Ten thousand dollars was the amount of damages awarded to United States Attorney Daniel W. Baker, yesterday afternoon, by the jury of Circuit Court No. 2, on the completion of the trial brought by him against Brainard H. Warner, in which he sued for $50,000.

The suit was based on an article published by Mr. Warner as a paid advertisement in the Washington Herald in March, 1908, which, according to the decision of Chief Justice Claiborne, implied that the district attorney had received money from bookmakers of the Benning race track to grant them immunity from prosecution.

After deliberating for less than an hour, the jury returned to the court room at 4 o'clock and announced a unanimous verdict as to the amount to which the plaintiff was entitled, according to the evidence in the case. The character and the amount of damages were the only questions submitted to them, as according to the ruling of the court the article in question was libelous per se, and Chief Justice Claiborne had instructed the jury to render a verdict against the defendant.

Sealed Verdict Expected. When the members of the jury left the courtroom it was the general opinion that they would not be able to reach a decision before court adjourned, and that their verdict would be sealed and delivered to the clerk of the court, to be announced this morning. For this reason the court room was nearly empty when word was received that the twelve men had passed upon the mass of evidence presented to them during the past three weeks and had agreed among themselves upon the extent to which the district attorney had been damaged by the publication of Mr. Warner's advertisement.

The amount awarded was about double that which was generally anticipated, and came as a surprise to almost every one present. Mr. Baker smiled, Mr. Warner frowned, but Mr. Darlington never moved an eyelid as the verdict of the jury was announced by its foreman. Hearty congratulations were bestowed upon Mr. Baker and his attorneys by their friends in the court room after their success at the trial.

Within a few minutes after the verdict was announced every one left the court room, well pleased that the long trial was finally over.

Baker's Counsel Pleased. Frank J. Hogan, of counsel for Mr. Baker, declared to a reporter for The Washington Herald: "We are more than pleased with the verdict. It is a complete vindication for our client. We consider it as a message to the people of the District that juries of this community will not permit a public official to be libeled with impunity."

Counsel for the defendant will to-day offer to the court a motion in arrest of judgment on the grounds stated by Mr. Darlington in his former motion, asking for a verdict for the defendant. The former motion was refused by the court on the grounds that it was not made at the proper time. If this motion in arrest of judgment, asking for the declaration in the case was defective, is not allowed an appeal on the numerous exceptions taken during the course of the trial will be made to the Court of Appeals of the District.

At the opening of the hearings in the morning Mr. Darlington began his statement to the jury by saying that his position in the case was not an agreeable one, as in his relations with the plaintiff had been close, and he had been counsel for the defendant for many years.

Explains Position. "Some lawyers," he said, "refuse to take cases in which other lawyers are involved. But I would regard it as a sad reflection on our profession if we were so bonded together that when one of us brings an action against a private citizen, the rest of us should refrain from taking part in the case."

He declared that in his opinion Mr. Baker did not bring the suit to get Mr. Warner's money, nor for revenge, but to crush a political rival who had gone against the machine in Montgomery County, with signal success. The political element in the case, he said, was responsible for the fact that there had been so much bitterness in it.

Knowing that Mr. Davis, of counsel for the defense, was to follow him, and evidently apprehensive of his well-recognized ability in jury cases, he tried to discount this by warning the jury that it was about to receive a rare treat in the address filled with humor, sarcasm, and an invective," and cautioned them to receive it coolly, and to decide the case absolutely on the merits, and to ignore the bitterness in their address they were about to hear.

Argues for Defense. Attorney Davis fully justified every-thing that was expected of him. For more than an hour he held the close attention of the jury in a forceful and eloquent address, in which every legitimate device of forensic art was used to place the case of his client in the most favorable light possible.

Mr. Warner was several times made the object of his telling sarcasm, but the greater part of his statement was confined to a defense of Attorney Baker's action in the matter of prosecuting the bookmakers, and to impressing upon the jury an appreciation of the injury, which he declared had been done to his client by the publication that the court had held to be libelous. As he took his seat he was complimented by many of the attorneys present in the court room.

In his charge to the jury, Chief Justice Claiborne declared that the only thing they were to consider was the amount of damages, and the testimony, he said, was to decide the intent or malice on the part of the defendant, and whether compensatory or punitive damages should be awarded.

Mr. Warner Not Perturbed. Mr. Warner was apparently not perturbed by the verdict of $10,000 returned against him. He seemed to feel assured that it would be some time at least before amount awarded would be collected, if at all. He said: "The collection of the $10,000 and the turning of it over to Mr. Baker will be just about as likely to occur as the payment of the $25,000,000 fine by the Standard Oil Company to the government, as awarded before Judge Landis in the Chicago court."

SUBSCRIPTION PLANS OFFERED.

Work Will Be Rushed on Structure at Seventh and C Streets. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company submitted plans for the new station at Seventh and C streets northwest to the Commissioners yesterday. It will cost about $2,000,000. The contract for the work will, it is said, be let as soon as the plans have been approved.

The main portion of the station will be located on the east side of Seventh street. An underground passage will connect the waiting-room with the train platform. This construction will eliminate all danger of accidents, and is further recommended by the fact that many fast express trains will be run on the outside tracks without reference to local traffic.

The work will be rushed, as the bill authorized by Congress, the construction of the station requires that the station must be completed within four months after its approval by the President. The construction has been the subject of some delay, owing to the dispute already divided the Commissioners some months ago, and was finally determined by the court.

MACHINISTS' CAUSE TOPIC AT MEETING

Navy Yard Employees Protest Against Discharge.

APPEAL IS MADE TO MEYER

President of National League of Navy Yard Workers Tells Local Branch of Visit to Secretary of the Navy—No Definite Decision by the latter—Future Efforts Are Planned.

To report on the progress made in their efforts to prevent the possible discharge of machinists at the Washington Navy Yard, and to discuss plans for the extension of their organization so as to include practically all navy yard employees of the Federal Government, Branch No. 4 of the National League of Employees of the Navy Yards, Naval Stations, Armories, and Gun Factories of the United States, held a meeting at Jennings' Hall, 314 Pennsylvania avenue southeast, last night, at which about 100 members of the league were present.

George L. Cain, of Boston, president of the national league, who had been summoned to Washington by telegram as soon as it was discovered that wholesale discharges were contemplated, was the principal speaker of the evening. He reported that, in company with a joint committee of the league and the machinists' union, he called upon Secretary Meyer of the Navy Department, with whom he had been personally acquainted in Massachusetts, and interceded with him in behalf of the navy yard employees. Secretary Meyer said that in the matter that he would do all he could in the matter, but could not give a definite answer until he was better informed as to the conditions in the yard, which were still new to him, and which were in the department but a short time.

Delegates Received. The members of the joint committee who were received by the Secretary were John B. Simering, C. A. Barnes, and W. Robb, representing the league, and E. L. Adams, T. Carroll, and H. Leclair, representing the machinists' union. This committee will take permanent charge of the matter, and do all in its power to influence the President, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the War, in keeping the men employed.

Speaking of the efforts of the navy yard employees to have a foundry erected, Mr. Cain said: "I have been fighting for years to have a foundry here in the navy yard. The only way you get it is to make a gigantic and united effort to get help from outside organizations. When the bill was before Congress some time ago I received a telegram from Washington that Representative Roberts, of Massachusetts, was opposing it in the Committee on Naval Affairs."

"I telegraphed Mr. Roberts that it was the wish of the employees of the Boston yard that this foundry should be built, and received assurances from him that he was not opposed to the bill and would do all he could to have it made a law. That is the way you should act toward all the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs," said Mr. Cain, at the same time urging the Washington branch to keep a lobby constantly at work to try to induce Congress to provide for the foundry.

Tells Ultimate Aim. Speaking of the ultimate aims of the National League, he said that an effort would be made to enlarge its scope, so that it would finally take in all the government employees in the different departments, including letter carriers, postal clerks, members of the Government Printing Office, and of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Working side by side with the labor unions, although independently of them, he said the league should look after the special interests of those who work for the government.

His idea was to form a federation of government employees who would meet in convention each year to discuss the welfare of those who worked for the national government. The National League now has about 10,000 members. The purpose of the organization is to keep all its members employed and to advocate the passage by Congress of all bills that are sanctioned by the President and the heads of the War and Navy Departments. Branch No. 4 of this city, which is only two months old, has already a membership of about 300, and is growing rapidly.

General Discussion Held. In the general discussion which followed Mr. Cain's address John B. Simering paid a glowing tribute to Rear Admiral E. C. Leitzel, who has interceded for us with the Secretary of the Navy, who is our friend, and who has fought our cause as if he were one of us. The mention of Admiral Leitzel's name brought forth a round of applause which indicated that he was regarded by the men as their champion. He had been invited to attend the meeting last night, but was compelled to decline because of a previous engagement.

Among those who attended the meeting were W. F. F. Bry, president of the Washington branch of the league; W. H. R. Martin, vice president; L. E. Kirby, secretary; E. W. Roe, assistant secretary; A. Barnes, financial secretary; F. W. Sharpe, treasurer, and F. P. Parker, sentinel.

With the same object in view as that of the National League, James O'Connell, president of the International Association of Machinists, with four other prominent labor officials, called on Assistant Secretary Wintthrop of the Navy Department, yesterday and urged him to do all he could to prevent the proposed discharge of 209 employees of the yard.
