

AIRSHIP DAMAGED AFTER GOOD FLIGHT Engine Stops When Machine Is High in the Air. HITS TREE IN LANDING Skids and Lower Plane Broken, but Aviator Uninjured.

Orville Wright in His Second Flight Forced to Seek Landing in Rough Ground, and Falls to See Small Tree Until Too Late—Damage Can Be Repaired in a Few Days, and Flights Will Be Resumed.

If the engine had not stopped eighty-five feet up in the air, and if the stub end of a young oak tree had not been lying in wait down on the parade ground at Fort Myer, the Wright aeroplane would now be resting safe and sound in its shed, with the best flight to its credit it has made since it got over its first balking.

As it is, the machine is lying on the floor like a bird with its legs cut off. The skids, or runners, are a mass of splintered wood, on which the silver paint looks strangely garish. The guy wires are a tangled mesh. The right wing tip, which had the falling out with the young oak tree, is torn to shreds.

As Orville and Wilbur Wright explained when they had examined the crippled machine, the outcome of the flight was due to nothing but a bit of hard luck—or a bit of young oak tree—and the sturdy frame of the aeroplane is not otherwise injured in the least. Neither is the engine. Some new canvas will have to be sent from Dayton, and a new pair of skids will have to be made. Flights will probably be commenced again next Tuesday.

The engine was at the bottom of the trouble again. After a beautiful flight of twelve circuits of the parade ground, followed by a perfect landing and a new start, eight more laps were reeled off at the rate of forty or more miles an hour. The white machine was behaving in fine shape. Orville had absolute control of it. It was flying higher, more confidently even, than it had on Thursday, and the heart of the crowd was with it.

WEATHER FORECAST.

For the District of Columbia, Maryland, and Virginia—Unsettled weather, probably showers to-day; much cooler by to-night. To-morrow fair and cooler; moderate southwesterly winds, shifting to brisk northwesterly.

STEAL GEMS WORTH $500,000.

Paris Thieves Rob Jeweler in a Cafe and Escape. London, July 2.—A man of the name of Goldschmidt, a Paris jeweler, took luncheon to-day with a customer at the Cafe Monaco. Mr. Goldschmidt went to the lavatory to wash his hands, and placed a bag containing valuable jewels in front of him. While the jeweler's hands were immersed in water, a man jostled against him and another snatched the bag and bolted out of the place.

DETECTIVES AID IN KIDNAPPING CHILD

Seized and Carried Away from Grandmother's Home. Boston, July 2.—From the home of his grandmother, at 33 Willowwood avenue, Dorchester, seven-year-old Carleton Clark, or Charleton Kreamer, as he is also called, was seized this afternoon by a woman said to be Mrs. Soda Kreamer, wife of Dr. Geza Kreamer, of 856 Lexington avenue, New York.

Seven-year-old Carleton Clark Has Figure in Similar Scenes Previous to This—Boy Stolen Two Years Ago, and for a Long Time Hidden Away—Lad Is Adopted.

The seizure was sensational. Four private detectives from a detective agency, under Manager Max Sherman and Mr. Kreamer, are said to have effected the job. This afternoon Sherman, with three of his men and Mrs. Kreamer, drove to the home of Mrs. Robert Buchanan, grandmother of the child, at 33 Willowwood avenue, Dorchester, in a carriage drawn by a fast horse. While one of the detectives went to the front door, Sherman, with Mrs. Kreamer and two others, went to the rear door.

DIES AFTER GRADUATING.

Young Virginian Victim of Abscess in His Head. Norfolk, Va., July 2.—William A. Thom, jr., son of the late Dr. Thom, of Norfolk, died early to-day at the Norfolk Protestant Hospital, an abscess in the head having burst upon the brain. Young Thom, a most promising young man, returned from college only last week. He neglected a pain in his ear, and an operation was performed too late. The boy died before a specialist from New York could arrive this morning.

INTERVIEW WITH THE WRIGHTS.

The Washington Herald to-morrow morning will have an authoritative interview—the most complete ever given to any newspaper by Wilbur and Orville Wright. The aviators in the story will explain why they think it is safer to navigate the air than to travel along an ordinary road in an automobile at the same rate of speed. They will explain how the damage to the machine yesterday affects in no way their contention that there is absolutely no danger to the operator in coming down from a high altitude in case of accident to the motor.

Julian D. Sargent, the writer of the story, will show how the Wright brothers, through their extensive patents, control practically the entire field of heavier-than-air navigation, both in this country and in Europe. He will show how the fundamental principle of aeroplaning, the use of adjustable wing tips, is secured to them through their letters patent.

That the Wright aeroplane, from an altitude of one mile, without motive power, can seek its own landing place anywhere in the District of Columbia or in contiguous territory in Maryland or Virginia is one of the startling scientific facts which will be brought out by the author.

To thousands who have visited Fort Myer this week, and to the hundreds of thousands who have been intensely interested in these trial flights, this article will be the most enlightening and comprehensive ever printed on this subject. Do not fail to get a copy of The Washington Herald Sunday morning.

CATCHES HORSE BY HOOP.

Driver Adopts Novel Method of Checking Runaway Animal. Spencer, Ind., July 2.—W. R. Peden, of Peden Brothers, land owners, took an unusual and dangerous plan to-day for checking a runaway horse. The horse had kicked off the dashboard of the buggy, and was reaching for the driver when Peden, watching his opportunity, caught the animal by the hoof, and, minkling down in the bed of the buggy, hugged the animal's leg to his breast and held on until it had run for three blocks on three legs and stopped. Mr. Peden was completely exhausted and fell out of the buggy.

CORPORATION TAX WINS IN SENATE

Measure Taft Fostered Attached to Tariff Bill. VOTE CAST IS 59 TO 11. Aldrich Scores When Efforts Seem Doomed. Only Three Democrats Oppose Amendment on Its Final Passage. Cummins and Eight Insurgents Hold Out—Expectation Is that Entire Bill Will Be Completed by End of Next Week—The Real Test.

CORPORATION TAX WINS IN SENATE

By a vote of 59 to 11 the corporation tax amendment to the tariff bill was adopted by the Senate at 7 o'clock yesterday evening, just prior to adjournment. Only three Democrats voted against the amendment when it was placed on its final passage; but prior to that, when tests votes were had, the Democrats generally and some of the Republicans formed the opposition to the measure. To-day the Senate will take up the maximum and minimum provisions of the tariff bill. The general expectation is that the consideration of the bill in the Senate will be completed by the end of next week.
