

The 1910 "White Sale."

The Palais Royal "Opening" occurs only after the old year stocks have been disposed of. The first question is, How to show with pictures and demonstrate in words the reliability of the new Lingerie here. This question is answered with another—has an unreliable garment ever been associated with a Palais Royal sale? This is the best answer—because both pictures and descriptions can be made to exaggerate. Is it not so? Has the reader not been entrapped, at some time or another, with the Lingerie whose beauty and worth were shattered in the first process of washing? Learn that even the 19c corset covers are here trimmed with laces that will not tear or fray in the laundry. Learn, too, that the most expensive garments are really cheap, when their beauty and elaboration are considered.

Complimentary Prices To-morrow.

To introduce the new $75,000 stock to the greatest number in the least possible time is a vital question for us. Answered with the following souvenirs of this, the Thirty-third Annual "White Sale."

- 15c for 19c Garments. Choice of 5 Styles. $1.33 for $1.50 Garments. Choice of 98 Styles.
- 25c for 39c Garments. Choice of 30 Styles. $1.88 for $2.25 Garments. Choice of 103 Styles.

The list of articles furnished by the wife of a rich man in her suit for divorce may account satisfactorily for the dissipation of a sum of money something like $30,000, but it shows her to be an awful spendthrift and worthy of the fate which usually comes to such beings. Evidently her main desire was to get rid of the money, as she could not have used one-half of the clothing it purchased.

There is never any excuse for waste. Those who have money are justified in lavish expenditure, in buying things which add to their comfort and happiness and please their many friends. But everything should be put to use, and that is not what always happens. If discarded articles were handed over to those who could use them, they would inevitably reach a decent end, and there would be more comfort and happiness in the world.

I belong to an organization with charitable motives, in which not a penny is spent for social purposes. There is no limit to the membership and no stipulation save that of an annual contribution whose lowest limit is the only one set by the president, who has full power of distribution. The members who care to sew make garments for men, women, and children; those who have neither time nor inclination for such work contribute money, which is converted into comforts for the unfortunate.

There is no publicity to the work of this club, and no red tape to delay distribution. The president is a woman of wide charity, one able to give generously, and glad to do it, which is more to the purpose. I think few of us give according to our means. I am sure that much can be found in many homes which is never faithfully put to use, although it would brighten life in humbler quarters.

I am not afraid of the future of the woman with generous impulses; she usually receives quite as much as she gives, provided she uses wisdom in her charity. I have not forgotten the sweet old lady who made Thanksgiving and Christmas happy days in humble homes by ordering big baskets of supplies from her grocer at those seasons. She selected the contents of each with an eye to the needs of each family, and when she died she delegated her task to one whom she knew would faithfully follow in her footsteps. Why cannot everybody do some thing according to means, of course?

UP-TO-DATE LADIES' COATS. Paris Patterns Nos. 3159, 3172

All Seams Allowed.

For early spring the garment pictured (No. 3159) is the latest style, possessing as it does a long shawl collar and turn-back cuffs. Its length is 23 inches, and the fronts closing in slightly double-breasted effect offer opportunity for the display of handsome buttons or frogs. A suggestion for material is Russian gray lightweight broadcloth, with deeper gray bengaline for facing the shawl collar and cuffs, while the buttons can be covered with the silk. Other materials which may be used are covert cloth, tweed, serge, cheviot or unfinished wool. The pattern is cut in six sizes, from 32 to 42 inches, bust measure. For 36 bust the coat requires 2 1/2 yards of material 42 inches wide.

Black satin-faced cloth is used for this handsome outdoor garment. The coat (No. 3172) is in 23-inch length, and has a shaped shawl collar and pointed lower edge. The front closing is effected in slanting line, and the back is arranged to correspond. The close-fitting sleeve is finished by a turn-back cuff. Among the materials which will lend themselves attractively to the development of this design are Venetian or covert cloth, cheviot, serge, Panama cloth or heavy silk. The shawl collar and the cuffs may be faced with contrasting material or heavily braided or embroidered. The pattern is cut in five sizes, from 32 to 40 inches, bust measure. For 36 bust the coat requires 3 1/2 yards of material 42 inches wide.
