OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

LITTLE PROBLEMS OF LOVE AND MARRIAGE

Is It Wise to Humor a Husband Too Much?

Some women there are whose nature it is when they love to give their all to the loved one. Their own thought, day and night, is for his comfort. His every wish must be gratified, his every whim humored.

Self-sacrifice for his pleasure becomes a joy. The thought of self rarely enters into their plans. If they do have special personal desires which clash with his, they immediately yield.

It is doubtful if this policy is a wise one. The comfort and happiness of her husband should, of course, be a wife's first consideration. But sometimes she can give too much and yield too much for their mutual happiness in the long run.

To fetch and carry for him because he is tired from his day's work; to run her feet off to wait on him, is simply training him to be lazy and selfish. There may be times of extra stress when she should do everything within her power to relieve him of the necessary little home duties. But to do it continually, when he is just as able to perform them as she, will in time cause him to develop an absolute indifference to them and a callousness to the fact that she is performing tasks which rightfully are his.

The best man in the world can be spoiled in this way. He will protest at first. But there's not one man in a hundred who will not gradually submit if his wife insists, and in the course of a few years lazily accept all her attentions. The wife who always yields all her pleasures to her husband's wishes, who gives up without a murmur the little outing or social affair she wants simply because he doesn't care to go, will find in time her wishes in such matters not considered at all. It is human nature. The best of men may struggle against it for awhile, but one is rare who does not succumb in time.

A wife can become a slave to a man and be a monument of selfishness through her humoring him too much. It is really her fault. She has dug the pit into which she has fallen. Of course, she had no idea of such a catastrophe. She started the bad business with the best intentions. But the thoroughly unselfish, self-denying person usually creates a selfish one.

When there is no good reason why a wife's desires should not have as much consideration as the husband's, he should yield to her wishes and do as much for her comfort as she does for him. It should be a mutual give and take. It operates the other way quite as prolifically, too. The wife who is always humored and petted will develop into a selfish, spoiled woman, though, as a rule, a man is not so given to unselfishness and self-abnegation as a woman. A woman is more apt to spoil a husband than the husband is the wife. And it is so insidious, it is done from the heart's sincerest promptings of love at first, that it needs to be most carefully guarded against. The woman who has a nature of this self-sacrificing sort should watch herself that she doesn't let it lead her gradually and unconsciously into spoiling a good husband.

BARBARA BOYD.

MORNING CHIT-CHAT.

"I'd give just about anything to have had a real good education," a man of thirty-five said to me the other day.

But I know he wouldn't.

Or else at the age of thirty-five he wouldn't put the getting of an education in such a hopelessly past tense.

The idea that education is a thing which must be gotten before the age of twenty or gone without is one of the most foolish fallacies that ever took root in people's brains.

The first twenty or twenty-five years of life are undoubtedly the best years for schooling, but show me the dictionary that says "best" is synonymous with "only."

From one of the Chicago high schools there was graduated a few weeks ago, along with a hundred or so young girls and boys, a woman of thirty-four.

When she had been married nine years and was the mother of three children this woman had the courage to set out to complete the education which at her coming from Germany to this country she had left unfinished.

Besides doing the housework and caring for the children, she took the four years' work in three years, receiving a general average of 90.

During the time, she was left a widow, and she is now planning to spend four more years in study in order to prepare herself to be a teacher and earn the money to educate her children. During this four years she will not only have to attend to her studies and her household, but will also have to support the children.

When I hear of things like that I wish I were a man so that I could take off my hat to those who do them.

This woman might have said, as did my friend of the first paragraph: "I'd give anything to have had a real good education."

But instead of saying it she gave it.

And besides winning her own education she has added to the sum of glorious examples that help disprove the silly idea that schooling and education are things for young people alone.

Not long ago I received a letter from a young girl, asking bravely: "Do you think sixteen is too old to begin to study to go to college if you have only gone as far as the seventh grade in public school?"

I wrote her that I certainly did not think sixteen was too old nor sixty either. I knew of a woman who entered college at the age of seventy and planned a programme that would take her until she was eighty.

The girl who won the highest honors in my class at college was a girl whom family reverses had forced to go to work as a telephone operator as soon as she graduated from high school.

But she had no intention of giving up her dream of her college career, and ten years later realized it—and found it only the sweeter for the delay.

I wonder if perhaps I'm talking to some one whose dreams of an education have been thwarted as these people's were at first?

And I wonder if, perhaps, these examples won't help him to believe as they did that "Too late" is not a phrase to be used of education.

TRANSFER PATTERNS.

(Upon receipt of this pattern, ordered on coupon below, place the rough or glazed side of the pattern down on material to be stamped, then press hot flat-iron on the back or smooth side of the pattern. Be careful not to let pattern slip.)

From the Chicago Tribune.

A bewildering number of changes will be rung upon the way in which the new short coat is fastened. It is not surprising that this new favorite will be treated to innovations that will differentiate it from the long coats of the winter.

In some cases there is a double-breasted effect, the revers extremely long and the buttons few in number. Then, again, a plastron is added. Another highly favored fastening is the invisible one, giving the impression of a poured-in-and-molded-to-the-figure style.

Points are also used, crossing and lapping at the side under braid and ornaments.

The buttons are gorgeous, depending upon enamel, jewels, and brilliant color effects for their beauty.

Color on Negligee.

From the Chicago Tribune.

Something new in embroidery is here for the lover of the dressing sacque and the negligee.

The touch of embroidery upon the palest white garment is now done in colored linen floss.

Mark you, the white scallop is not abandoned on this color-touched garment, and aside from its ribbons and the effective showing of rather strenuous work, the negligee is as dainty as ever.

Getting Worse Every Minute.

We are told that if the inmates of all the office buildings in the most overbuilt section of lower New York were to leave their skyscrapers at the same time six strata of sidewalks would be required to give this mass footway, says Harper's Weekly.

It is asserted that the population of New York City is growing at the rate of 50,000 persons a year, which means that in the next half century the city will contain double the number of inhabitants that it does to-day.

Even granting that this rate of increase is somewhat exaggerated, the necessity of arranging for tremendous expansion is obvious to all. The problems of transit up and down town, and from one quarter of the city to the other, the means of ingress and egress, cry aloud for immediate consideration.

I am reminded of the story of the elderly spinster who was a witness in court and when asked her age hesitated a long time. After much delay and several repetitions of the question the judge rapped the desk impatiently and said: "Hurry up, madame; every minute makes it worse." This is our present condition.

FROM WOMAN'S POINT OF VIEW.

To be a hostess means much more than to send out invitations and receive guests—it means that each guest must be treated as if there was but one, and so many hostesses overlook this point. There are always women who can take care of themselves, and expect to do it, and it is equally sure that every gathering will contain at least one woman who is shy or sensitive. Any hostess worth the name keeps an eye out for such a guest and gives her special attention.

Real hostesses, like poets, are born and not made, but any woman of ordinary intelligence can make an afternoon or evening, a day or any number of days, pass pleasantly for men and women. She must be alert, however, and fill in any gap which may appear. She must be able to provide entertainment according to the need of each guest and be able to read a desire for solitude. There is much comfort sometimes in being left to one's own devices, especially when one is a house guest.

Ideal hospitality is the kind which has a warm reception for the chance guest. Open house used to be the rule, now it is the exception, chiefly because life is so full of interest; there are too many calls from the outside world to allow women to dress and act the part of hostess save by appointment. A few years ago every woman considered one or more pretty house gowns a necessary part of her wardrobe. If a woman of leisure, she was ready to entertain guests on certain days of the week or certain hours of the day; if employed during the day, she was glad to remove her street clothing and dress for the evening at home with the certainty or prospect of guests.

Nowadays women go out to social functions at all hours of the day—lectures and musicals in the forenoon, luncheons in public places at noon, matinees with tea in the afternoon, and theaters, concerts, and parties in the evening. The occasional dinner-party and evening soiree for rest when there is nothing going on. Eating away from home has become a habit that leaves the larder empty, and women profess to find a deal of comfort and satisfaction in entertaining at places where they can hold somebody responsible for shortcomings. I doubt if we ever return to the old order of things on account of the scarcity of reliable domestic assistance, but we are missing much that sweetened life for our grandmothers.

BETTY BRADEEN.

Swedish Meat Balls—Require three-quarters of a pound of chopped raw beef, one-quarter pound pork sausage meat, half a cup white bread crumbs, a pinch onion salt, and enough milk to moisten the mass when it has been well mixed. Let it stand for at least half an hour, then add one egg. Shape into round balls or cakes and fry in sizzling hot butter or hot oil and half lard. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and serve.

Handkerchiefs.

From the Buffalo Express.

The border of your handkerchief, if you color it with hand embroidery, should match with your tailored suit.

You would have observed, had you lived in France, that the kerchief is very small and the embroidery is unusually large.

The colored work consists of huge coin-spots across one corner or round the entire edge. They are worked in solid stitch, padded, and are very rich and, at the same time, dainty.

The most extreme among them show a single dollar-sized dot in one corner. This, done in a vivid blue or a rare azalea pink, is indeed fetching for the young girl in the gay linen costume.

Large Hats Revived.

From the Buffalo Express.

Resurrect the old broad-brimmed summer hat you discarded a few years ago, and positively could not wear last summer. It will be the best of sun hats for the coming season and quite "in style" once more.

Poke a great bunch of half-worn roses under the brim at the back. With a covering of maline they will not suffer in contrast to the fresher leaves and blossoms on the brim.

This back decoration tilts the hat forward very much as we wore them some years ago. The flat hat comes as a relief for those who have not found becoming the coosack and Corday shapes.
