The Woman Who Is Never Lonesome.

Do you number among your acquaintances the cheery woman who never gets lonesome, or who never has the blues? Isn't her friendship a delight? And she is not only a joy and an inspiration to her friends, but she herself finds life a vastly enjoyable experience. She is glad of the gift of life, and that is a great deal.

It means so much to living, this having resources of entertainment within one's self, that it is a characteristic worth cultivating. A woman wrote recently that her husband had been given a position in Buenos Ayres, South America, by his firm. She wrote she couldn't possibly think of going down there to live, she would be so lonesome, and would it be wrong to let him go by himself and she stay here among her friends. Had she been one of the women who are never lonesome, she could have gone cheerfully and happily. So that it is not only a quality worth cultivating for the added enjoyment it gives to life, but it is a characteristic which one must successfully just such crises as this which may confront one unexpectedly at any time. The woman who is never lonesome can be happy in a desert. The most remote mountain region or the most solitary sands of Arizona have no power to affect her enjoyment in living.

The cultivation of this valuable trait should be begun in childhood. It is a child is taught to amuse itself, to find things to play with, and to devise games for the commonplace everyday articles about him, he will grow up able to entertain himself. The mother who constantly amuses her child is not doing him the greatest good. She should teach him to find his own amusement. The familiar childish question, "What shall I do next?" should be answered by suggesting what to do next but by arousing his own initiative to find for himself what to do next.

But if a person was not given this start in life, if he has grown up looking to others to find amusement for him, it is not too late to start out on the search for one's self. Indeed, it will be found to be quite interesting. Let him dig down into the everyday things about him for their resources in the way of entertainment. The woman who is interested in even the most commonplace details of the home will not be lonesome if she goes about them in the right spirit. Taking a genuine and vital interest in the little, everyday things of life will prevent a woman from being lonesome. Finding pleasure in simple enjoyments is another good remedy for lonesomeness. All these things have something to give one if she will open her mind to their message. The lonesome woman is longing for something she hasn't and refusing to accept what she has.

There are so many things to enjoy in this life—books, pictures, flowers, music, sunsets, music, walks on city streets or country roads, people—that would seem one would never have time to be lonesome or to have the blues. Just to sit and think about pleasant things is enjoyable. To wrestle with the problem of life and to work it out successfully is a keen delight. It is a wonder any one ever could be lonesome with all these things to think about and to do. It is this ability within one's self to extract amusement and diversion from these everyday things that prevents lonesomeness. BARBARA BODD.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

The Northminster C. E. Society recently gave an Old Folks' concert to finish paying the new church window donated by the society, and the entertainment was repeated at the Presbyterian Home, June 3. Miss Lillie Bailey, of Gunton Temple Church, rendered valuable assistance. Mrs. Edna Bushee, treasurer of the District, will give a talk on Camp Good Will, at the society's meeting to-morrow evening. Mrs. Bushee will be in charge of Camp Good Will during the recording session. The Wednesday evening prayer meeting of last week, at the Presbyterian Home, was conducted by the society, with M. S. Nauright, of Newark, (N. J.) C. E. Society, as leader.
