CONDUCTOR QUILTS AND TIES UP LINE

Refuses to Take Instruction from Passengers.

NEWSBOY TO THE BELLCORD

Gives Signal Enabling Motorman to Proceed, After J. R. Warner Had Left His Post on Rock Creek Bridge Line—Woman the Cause of the Difficulty—Back to Reading, Pa.

J. R. Warner is no longer a conductor on the Rock Creek Bridge line. He resigned at Eighteenth and U streets at 6 o'clock last night, and car No. 43 proceeded to the bridge loop with a newsboy at the bell rope.

It happened when a woman got off the car while it was in motion, and Warner asked her to get on the car.

A passenger sitting near the conductor requested him to be more polite. Warner did not think he had any right to try to regulate street car affairs just because he paid 5 cents to ride, and told him so.

It was an official.

But Warner was mistaken, for the passenger was an official of the Capital Traction Company.

"You report in Georgetown to-morrow, young man," said the portly passenger.

"Not on your life," said Warner. "I had reported once for examining a coin that looked counterfeit, and they made me apologize to the woman who gave it to me. I'll not apologize any more, and I'll not be fired. I'll quit, and I'll quit now."

With this he stepped off the car, and there it was without a conductor.

Motorman Couldn't Start Up.

Earl Beall was the motorman, and when he went to work for the Capital Traction Company he was instructed to wait for two bells before starting his car after it had stopped.

"Aw, come on back, Warner," he said. "I don't want to keep this car here all night!"

"I don't care if you keep it there 'till Christmas," said the conductor. "I'm done conducting. I'm going back to Reading, Pa., and I'll school. I didn't have any business leaving. Five months is enough for me of this kind of work. I'm no slave."

"Come on, kid; I'll take back what I said," the officious passenger said.

"Come on," pleaded the other passenger. "We've got to get home."

Newsboy on the Job.

Warner refused to be a conductor another block, in spite of pleading, and Motorman Beall induced a newsboy to pull the bell cord, at which the trip was resumed, and all the cars that had been waiting behind were strung out again on their run.

The young conductor boarded a car going back toward the Seventh street barn, where he checked up with a superintendent, but before he got there he remembered his register, got off, caught another car for the loop, overtook his own car, took his papers, and then returned to the barn, where he checked up, demanded his pay, and validated his resignation.

He spoke about the ancient Jewish history, and said: "Although Judaism did not occupy herself in her long period to leave a memory as to the birthday of her heroes, she left a great memory to the birthday of the whole humanity in general."

Court of Appeals Opened with New Custom.

With the opening of the new District Court of Appeals Building yesterday a new custom was introduced by the three justices of this tribunal appearing in gowns similar to those of the justices of the United States Supreme Court.

Only two hours will be allowed hereafter to argue a case, according to an announcement made by Chief Justice Shepard yesterday.

There was a large crowd of lawyers and spectators present at the opening of the court in its new home, and, aside from the continuance of several cases, the only business transacted was the admission of the following young attorneys to practice in the court: Herman T. Dr. W. E. B. Du Bois, of New York, in a lecture on "The forward movement" at the opening last night of Bethel Literary Society at Metropolitan A. M. E. Church, declared that with increasing wealth and intelligence on the part of the negro had come disfranchisement, separate cars, and curtailed educational facilities. He said that, despite the fact that negro leaders preached contentment on the part of their race with present conditions, there is widespread dissatisfaction with conditions, and he criticized Booker T. Washington for telling people in Europe that all is well with the negro here.

"Is it not time then," he continued, "that after years of experiment we should step forward and seek systematic definite knowledge of ourselves, make continued protest against injustice, and in every way increase our organized effort? This programme is not one of frightful or forbidding radicalism, nor does it exclude anything for which an honest opportunist rightly strives."

ODEN HORSTMANN LET OUT

Clubman Dismissed as Assistant Clerk of Excise Board.

Action Based on Grounds that He Overstepped Authority in Submitting Reports. F. Oden Horstmann is no longer assistant clerk of the excise board. He was dismissed yesterday.

After offering the vacancy to Henry Naylor, former excise inspector, who declined to accept the position, the board decided upon D. W. Fleming, who will begin his new duties to-day.

Commissioner Johnston, who had Mr. Horstmann transferred recently from the street cleaning department, yesterday declined to talk on the dismissal.

W. P. Richards said the board would welcome any charges preferred against it by the dismissed assistant clerk, attacking their personal characters or official acts. The dismissal of Mr. Horstmann is based on the grounds that he overstepped his authority by submitting reports of his investigations of the liquor traffic direct to the Commissioners, over the heads of the board.
