FEMININE CONFIDENCES.

WITH the year just opened, I would not have you make all kind of resolves which will be too heroic to carry out, but I hope that you will endeavor toward a moral and mental uplift in your daily lives that will show its effects by the time another year has dawned. Cultivate the habit of thinking beautiful thoughts, and this will elevate your mind to do beautiful deeds. Determine that you will read each day at least one noble poem, see a fine picture, and study its meaning, or do one kindly act which will give pleasure to another, if it is no more than to pass a pretty compliment you may have heard. Life is made up of these little things, and often a graceful word will send another who has felt recently the brunt of the day's battle on her way with a lighter heart and a happier mind. Many of us busy people have little time to read as we would like to do, nor do we have time to often visit art galleries, or the money to buy the pictures we would like to own, but as we ride to and from business offices, there is time to enjoy a thought like Henry Van Dyke's "Footpath to Peace," which I will quote now, in case you haven't the time to look it up yourself. Take the thought with you through to-day—it will help you, I am sure, as it does me. If you do not have to go out to work, read it while your bread is baking or your child lies asleep in your arms:

"To be glad of life, because it gives you the chance to love and to work and to play and to look up at the stars; to be satisfied with your possessions, but not contented with yourself until you have made the best of them; to despise nothing in the world except falsehood and meanness, and to fear nothing except cowardice; to be governed by your admiration rather than by your disgusts; to covet nothing that is your neighbor's except his kindness of heart and gentleness of manners; to think seldom of your enemies, often of your friends, and every day of Christ; and to spend as much time as you can with body and with spirit, in God's out-of-doors—these are little guide posts on the footpath of peace."

Seven Famous Beauties

No. 5. THE GUNNING SISTERS

One of the most romantic stories of its character in history is that of the Misses Gunning, the two famous Irish beauties, who, through their own personal charms and tact, assisted by an ambitious mother, carried London by storm and won for themselves titled husbands. When Elizabeth and Marie were born their parents were so poor that they could not afford to educate their children. They were left to roam at will among the wild Irish bogs and moors, and appreciating their natural beauty, Mrs. Gunning found that each day was adding to its freshness by this method.

The mother bided her time, and when the announcement was made of the grand ball that was to usher in the rule of the Earl of Harrington, she felt that it had now arrived and, with her daughters, she started for Dublin. It was no easy task to secure an invitation, but fortunately, she knew Mrs. Woffington, and through her obtained the desired cards. But without funds how were the girls to look presentable. Again "Pretty Peggy" came to their assistance, and loaned the clothes from her own wardrobe. The success of their debut was unbounded. They completely won the attention of the nobility by their striking beauty.

Two years later they were taken to London, where they became bells of the fashionable set, and it was not long before the Duke of Hamilton fell in love with Elizabeth and married her. Thus she gained for herself a title and her two sons succeeded to the Hamilton estate. Upon her husband's death Lady Hamilton married John Campbell, who became the second Duke of Argyll, and upon the death of Campbell their two sons succeeded in the same title. Marie also made a distinguished marriage, when she became Lady Coventry.

Such was the success of the Gunnings that even to this day in Connaught, the Irish peasantry, Mrs. Gunning is still a famous visitor: "May the luck of the Gunnings attend you." In all the high places, however, to which the beauty of these Irish girls brought them, they carried themselves proudly and with an ease and charm and dignity that made their success remarkable.

Walpole, writing to Sir Horace Mann, thus referred to the Irish sisters: "The famous beauties are more talked of than the change in the ministry. They make more noise than any one of their successors since Helen of Troy; a crowd follows them everywhere they walk, and at Vauxhall the curious rabble had to be driven away, but this mobbing is a sure sign of success."

Lord Cherment describes how, one Sunday when the young ladies were in the park, such crowds collected to gaze at them, and so violent and impertinent was their curiosity that he, as well as other gentlemen who escorted the ladies, had to draw their swords to protect them from the too bold admiration of the mob.

History fails to record what became of the ambitious mother who had gone to great extremes to secure brilliant matches for her beautiful daughters, but it may be inferred that, with the tact and resourcefulness she displayed, she was able to enjoy a full amount of satisfaction at her final success.
