

GENERALS RACE TOWARD JUAREZ

rectors were also arrested near Pelen, N. Mex. These arrests were made by United States troops guarding the border.

Thursday morning is the day that has been set by the junta for the attack on Juarez, although the plans of the organization are changed so frequently that this is nothing definite.

Organizing Regular Army. The insurgent army is now being organized into definite units, with a signal corps, artillery corps, and infantry and cavalry detachments, it is stated.

Many Americans visited the insurgent camp, and souvenirs bearing the signature of Gen. Orozco became a common sight. Thousands of Americans, not venturing enough to cross the border, stood on the Texas side and watched the insurgents from the short distance that separated them.

Uncontested reports came several times during the day that insurgents had met with success, and his reinforcements advancing on Juarez, and that fighting was occurring south of Juarez. These are generally discredited, yet are possible, as both Navarro and Blanco, with their commands, are south of here, each trying to get here first.

INSURRECTOS DEFEATED IN A MOUNTAIN DEFILE.

San Diego, Cal., Feb. 8.—Pouring a steady fire into the ranks of sixty revolutionists, Capt. Gonzalez and his federal force of seventy-five men drove the insurgents out of Pichicho Canyon late yesterday, after killing fifteen men.

The battle was fought near Campo, about fifty miles southeast of San Diego, and news of the casualties was telephoned to this city tonight. Gov. A. C. Lowe, California, and a body of mounted men, are in pursuit of the revolutionists, who escaped from the canyon. The insurgents are fleeing toward Mexicali, through a country without means of communication, and the next news regarding them and their pursuers probably will come from that place.

According to the news received here the battle in the canyon, which is eighteen miles long, was short and bloody, lasting only forty-five minutes. The federal troops killed fifteen men, wounded a number, and captured six persons and the remains of ammunition. The casualties on the federal side were not reported.

The government troops had the advantage of position in the canyon and surprised the revolutionists, firing a demoralizing volley into the ranks, while they were passing through the canyon. The revolutionists at first fought with great valor, but could not dislodge the attacking party, and were forced to flight. It is supposed the insurgents were part of a detachment sent from Mexicali to take possession of Lower California.

Six Generals Shot. Following the judgment of a court-martial, six rebel generals, including Millard, the alleged head of the revolution, were taken from the jail at Trou last night and shot. Gen. Millard was captured soon after the beginning of the revolt, which continued despite his loss.

County Option Is Defeated. Omaha, Neb., Feb. 8.—County option was defeated in the Nebraska senate today by the narrow vote of 17 to 16. The defeat is, in a large measure, due to the lassitude displayed by William J. Bryan, who did not raise his voice in support of the bill, although county option was the great issue in last fall's campaign, made so by the action of Mr. Bryan himself.

G. O. P. LOYAL SONS HEAR FINE ORATORY

Banquet Speakers Talk on Progressiveness.

PRESIDENT TAFT IS ABSENT

"Uncle Joe" Cannon Also Fails to Attend League's Dinner, but Representative Longworth Makes Speech Landing Tariff Board and Advocating Canadian Reciprocity.

While it is still the grand old Republican party, which will come back to power in 1912, and the universe will last just as long as said party, it was perfectly apparent last night at the seventh annual banquet of the League of Republican State Clubs, held in the Arlington Hotel, that something was bothering the speakers and possibly the hearers.

President Taft was not on hand. E. C. Snyder, president of the league and toastmaster last night, said Mr. Taft intended up to noon to be there, but had suddenly come upon such a rush of business that he could not get away.

Leaders Among Absentees.

Speaker Joe Cannon was on the card, but it was stated that he was under the weather and his physician had positively refused to allow him to leave home.

Vice President Sherman, Gov. Benjamin F. Hooper, of Tennessee, and Representative Julius Kahn, of California, were also absent, although billed to make speeches.

Representative Nicholas Longworth, of Ohio, and Representative John J. Gardner, of New Jersey, were substitute orators, and both acquitted themselves nobly.

Mr. Longworth said that there would certainly be a solid delegation from Ohio to the next Republican national convention to vote for Mr. Taft, and that Ohio would give Mr. Taft a substantial majority at the polls.

Mr. Longworth was the only speaker to come right out in the open and boldly discuss reciprocity with Canada. His speech would be the main topic of the evening. Probably the fact that the President was expected to talk on that subject caused the other speakers to steer clear of it out of respect for him.

"We Republicans have been called unprogressive," said Mr. Longworth. "Why, we have passed more constructive measures in the time we have been in power than any other party in the history of the country. We have just agreed to a tariff board and it will become established if the project is not stopped by the Democrats."

"I am in favor of a tariff board, one that will be on hand all the time and meet conditions as they arise—one that will handle the tariff subject by subject.

Favors Reciprocity Pact. "And I want to say, although some may not agree with me, I am in favor of reciprocity with Canada. I say this, although I came from the State which produced the greatest tariff advocate and expert we have ever known—William McKinley. I hope we have reciprocity, because its first step was advocated by William Howard Taft."

The great care of Mr. Longworth to point out the progressiveness of the Republican party with Canada was the subject of much comment. He also, by innuendo and direct statement, those in the party who call themselves "Republican progressives" were held up as subjects for sad contemplation by the country and the evening. Also, by innuendo and direct statement, those in the party who call themselves "Republican progressives" were held up as subjects for sad contemplation by the country and the evening.

John Hays Hammond, president of the league, was particularly strong on the progressiveness of the party itself. In his opening address he said: "Today, in order to gain favor, certain persons within our ranks must use the word 'progressive.' But I say the word is tautologous. I refer to the National Republican Progressive League for the use of the word in the title of the party. The word Republican itself implies progress, and no great measure for the last twenty years has come into existence in the history of the world, which has not been the result of the initiative of the Republicans. I was asked if the new organization would conflict with our league. Knowing some of the men in their ranks as I did, and I did not wish to be disparaged, I replied that I thought not."

Would Be Disloyalty. "I know that the men in that organization would know that opposition to the Republican party would be disloyalty, and that opposition to the administration would be fruitless. I would like them to remember that the motto of our league is 'Peace, Progress, and Prosperity.' They should bear in mind that judgment as well as enthusiasm is necessary, and that good intentions are often responsible for the worst singing in the choir."

"I am confident that the people recognize in Mr. Taft one of the greatest Presidents in the history of the country, and that the leaders regard him as the best asset of the party. He is not busying himself about the candidate for 1912 as much as I, perhaps, think he should, but the leaders realize his worth, and the next national convention will be for him by an overwhelming majority. We of the league have always been for Taft, and will be again."

Toastmaster Snyder, in introducing Mr. Hammond, said the league was formed in Washington seven years ago with representatives from four States, and that now it had representatives from twenty-five States.

"If I had to write the party motto, it would be to the effect that we all get together for more union and for the common good," he continued. "If we do not, war will overtake us. And I would add that the civil employes of the government get their proper increases in pay."

Keeping Close Hauled. Representative Gardner was pained deeply by what he called many times the "adverse winds" that had blown over some of the New Jersey delegation along with others. He pointed the G. O. P. to the wind and agreed that it was keeping mighty close hauled these days. He recommended that the present course be kept, and that there be no "keeping off" and sailing backward with sails bellied out by the fierce winds of passing passion or mistaken judgment.

This smacked of a swat at the "progressives," and was taken as such by the audience, which cheered. Senator-elect H. Townsend, of Michigan, said that he was born in the town of Jackson in that State where fifty-six years ago the Republican party
