

RESOLUTION OF THE SNOW PROBLEM BY SOME OF OUR EXPERT SOLVERS

These Men Know More Than Any Other Public Official About Keeping Washington the City Beautiful in Winter Time.

By JAMES FRANK LYMAN.

Well, now that the season of Santa Claus and shopping has passed, what do we do with this year's snow?

Remember last year? Heavy snow—clogged up streets—Commissioner Johnston begging for $100,000 cash to clear away the mess—President Taft no less vigor talking about the danger of an attack of Presidential pneumonia occasioned by a short walk on Pennsylvania avenue—conference—Gehenna!

Oh, it was a lovely time they had last year. Commissioner Johnston was anguished, deprived of his job and Commissioner Judson was trying to find fifteen different reasons why it should be dumped on him. It was lovely in after the sun had done what Washington street cleaners had failed to do and the amphibious citizens were only ones who could come to work about being drowned.

SNOW AGAIN A PROBLEM.

But will we do with the snow this year? It's all fixed up. Come what may, we are enough suggestions from eminent Washingtonians to save the city and prevent the Arctic intrusions.

How to keep snow from falling.

How to keep it up after it has fallen. It is merely a form of salt. When Washington snows, it is salted down so regularly that it wouldn't mind a little extra dose of the medicine if it was delivered for a good cause.

"Why can't a householder clean off his own front walk?" asked the major.

"Well, why can't he?" was asked.

"Injections of public spirit," said the major, "are what this town needs."

Work for Each One.

And then he explained that the president should clean off the White House, Secretary Knox should attend to the Department of State, Attorney General Wickham, when not busting trusts, might rattle snow—each and every individual should join in a patriotic crusade against snow, beautiful snow—you know.

Salt Solution for Him.

Elliott Woods, superintendent of the Capitol, who was in the District Building at the time, had his own ideas of the best manner of cleaning off the city streets. Salt, he says, is the solution.

"No man knows," he dramatically declared, "what value salt has. We use it in Congress all the time for various purposes. Hence the fine, mossy, nonfrost atmosphere that we have created. This same salt should be scattered broadcast on the streets when the first snowflake of the season makes its appearance."

spotting snow would melt before it got within a mile of them.

James Patten, superintendent of street cleaning, and the man whose lovely little job consists principally in explaining why he hasn't done things that everybody knows he—or no other human being—could do, seemed pessimistic. His voice was sozzly when he spoke of the idea of piling snow into wagons and hauling it miles across country to some place where it would melt.

Wagon Loads of It.

"If only some brilliant thinker would try to corner the snow market and sell it," said he gloomily, "there might be a real idea in hauling it around in wagons. But somehow a wagon full of snow always reminds me of a bucketful of air."

LIFE TERM FOR PRISONER AS RESULT OF ELOQUENT LECTURE ON PROHIBITION

A rising young lawyer of the town not long ago was assigned to defend a man who was charged with murder. The defense was that the alleged murderer had been so drunk at the time he did the killing that he was helpless and unable to tell what had occurred.

"BREAD LINE" IS PLACE WHERE SUBMERGED TENTH CAN BEST BE STUDIED

The rags and tatters of Washington's submerged tenth have, during the last few days, merged themselves, through the medium of the Gospel Mission, 216 John Marshall place, into a bread line.

Every morning as the sun of a bitter winter's morning rises behind the Capitol dome, the ragged line creeps, no one knows from where, forms in front of the mission building and awaits the arrival of H. W. Kline, superintendent of the place, who gives the morning ration.

It isn't much from the standpoint of the average man. A huge slice of bread and a tin cup of black coffee—that is the breakfast of the bread line. But those who have waited since dawn for this food invariably are thankful in a measure out of proportion to what they have received.

REPORTER'S REPARTEE HITS MANAGER OF BURLESQUE HOUSE UNDER THE BELT

Several days ago a manager of a burlesque house, whose initials are A. M., was sitting in his front office with a group of show people when a reporter went in to inquire about a new building.

"Look here," if you were only getting breaths of air when reporters saw you all the oxygen tanks in the world wouldn't save you from suffocation. Good night."

DR. WILEY IS INVENTOR OF COSTARE COCKTAIL

One of Delicacies of the Season Is Sanitary and Much More, According to Experts.

The Bacchian takes a sip. His eyes gleam with the light of a Brahmin priest at worship; he gulps down a glass of glowing ineffable joy or spreads his countenance.

Then he clucks. They always cluck. He licks his lips before he once more lifts the wonderful, me-e-carveous beverage to his mouth.

This is the joy that the "Costare" cocktail, Washington's new sanitary drink, which is founded primarily on the lines laid down by Dr. Harvey Wiley in his pure food crusade, has brought to the gourmet who knows what is what in the line of drinkables.

bitters, minus absinthe, minus dangerous acid or coloring materials. It is a regulated, pure, medicinal kind of drink.

Oh, well, it might as well be told now. Half of a ripened orange—one of those large, luscious oranges—should be squeezed into the juice is out. Then, very slowly, pour in about two-thirds of a statesman's drink—two and three-quarter inches of other liquid.

Stir slowly and put into the glass where it will be frapped. When the mixture has been frapped, pour into a cocktail glass and—well, if you don't know what to do then you might as well throw it away.
