English Baroness and Jack Henderson are engaged.

London, June 30.—The usual proceedings of international marriages is about to be reversed, for instead of an American heiress taking an estate and a title, an English girl with a real dowry is about to marry a plain American. The principals are the Baroness Sonia Bourchard, of Trilham, in Brittany, and Jack Henderson, of New York, an actor, now playing here in "The Pink Lady."

The baroness, who is twenty years old and the possessor of great beauty, met Henderson at a house-party on the Thames. The dowager baroness first objected to the marriage on the ground that she did not want her daughter to live where she would be known as plain "Mrs. Henderson."

Henderson admitted the engagement to-day, and said the wedding would take place before he returns to America in the autumn.

"Lagunappo."
From the New York Times.
It is the custom in New Orleans for shopkeepers to present their customers with a gratuity in the shape of a handful of confectory or other trifling delicacy. This is termed "lagunappo" (lag-yap). "You've forgotten the lagunappo," one often hears a boy or girl say to shopkeepers when buying supplies.

Grace Hazard Weds Fred Dupres After Many Difficulties.
London, June 30.—Grace Hazard, known on the American stage as "five feet of comic opera," yesterday married Fred Dupres, the vaudeville actor. They planned an elopement in Liverpool, but were talked by the bride's mother, and again when they managed to elude Mrs. Hazard and get to a registrar's office by the English coast, which requires a three weeks' residence.

Dupres finally obtained a special license and the ceremony was performed. Mrs. Hazard was then taken to an apartment in London, where she will reside herself, and the parental blessing followed.

ASTORS TO MAKE TOUR.
Former Ava Willing and Vincent to Motor Through Europe.
London, June 30.—Mrs. Ava Willing Astor has mapped out an extensive automobile tour on the continent. Her son, Vincent Astor, will accompany her. As soon as he joins her here they will go to Paris, which will be the starting point of the tour. Mrs. Astor's present intention is to "do" the chateau district, then go to Italy and return through Germany. Mrs. Astor and her son probably will pass some time at Newport in the late autumn, but she has no intention of making America her permanent home. It is quite certain that Vincent Astor will be made much of here, so he may develop as great a liking for England as his mother.

Frederick Townsend Martin, who has been giving some of his accustomed original entertainments in Paris, is expected here in July. He will pass the autumn in Scotland with the Bradley-Martins as usual.

Ouled Nails Wear Dowry.
The distinctive thing about the Ouled Nail, to professional dancing girl of North Africa, is her jewelry. She has so much of it, indeed, that there is no gold to be had in Algeria. Ask for napoleons instead of paper money at your bank in Bliska or Constantine, and you will meet with a prompt "Impossible, m'sieur."

"But why is it impossible?" you naturally inquire.
"Because we have no gold on hand, m'sieur," is the polite response.
"Where is it, then?" you ask, scenting a robbery or defalcation.
"On the Ouled Nail, m'sieur," the cashier courteously replies.
And, he specifies the truth, according to an article on "Stress of the Desert."

in the Metropolitan Magazine. Every centime that a dancing girl can beg, borrow, or earn goes toward the purchase of massive silver jewelry, anklets, bracelets, and the like, and this in turn is exchanged for gold pieces—whether French napoleons, British sovereigns, or Turkish liras, she is not particular—which, linked together in that iridescent array of which, have already spoken, clanking, clashing, and shining, form her lithe young body from neck to when her portable wealth is such that she is able to buy for the Ouled Nail, m'sieur, a new gown, going to her room, and her dowry around her.

American Manners Poor, Says Count Boni's Cousin

August Scheffelsky de Mukkadel de Castellane Seymore Would Establish Municipal School of Politeness in the Capital.

Washington is to have a School for Gentlemen, if the plans of August Scheffelsky de Mukkadel de Castellane Seymore, of New York, Paris, and San Francisco, cousin of Count Boni, are successfully carried out. The many named visitor rates himself as an impressionist, traveler, ex-diplomat, missionary of manners, fashion and courtesies, and advanced thinker on fifty-nine different subjects of advanced modernness, and is visiting in our midst.
Not only is he with us, but after looking us over he has reached the conclusion that we, as well as the rest of the inhabitants of the United States, have very unbecoming manners, which should be improved, as it were, and he proposes to interest the District Commissioners or Congress in a scheme to raise these neglected manners to a higher plane.
August Seymore, that's the way he likes to be addressed, wears a fiery mustache that bristles upward and onward like that of the German Emperor. When he first came to America a dozen years ago his name ran along melodiously until it reached de Castellane, and then it stopped.
The Seymore has been hitched on since then. He likes it better, he's willing to offer odds that he will make the plain Seymore name as celebrated as that of the de Castellanes.
Last night Mr. Seymore explained many things about Washingtonians that they ought to know about right smack away. He wore a smart, black, and heavily braided morning suit, John-Drewian trousers, and a straw sailor hat with a swagger ribbon. His shirt, that is the outside one, was pink, and his boutonniere was a pink carnation.
Mr. Seymore has wandered about this country, looking us over. He has just arrived in Washington and after flitting the city out under his microscope he got quite worked up and has decided to indict a letter to the District Commissioners, explaining that while our manners were rather rotten, he could see a way toward purging them.
"First," says Mr. Seymore, "I would suggest that the Commissioners appoint a committee to investigate my qualifications as a Man of Manners, Fashions, and Courtesies." Then they can obtain my services for a stated period as Municipal Director of Manners, Fashions, and Courtesies. Thirdly, they should place at my disposal quarters in the Municipal Building where I might lecture on this subject each evening for the benefit of the public in general.
Mr. Seymore mentions that his terms are but $500 per week. He stipulates, however, that he must have the services of two attendants, ushers and six musicians, piano, cornet, violin, flute, and two violins.
"Oh!" said Mr. Seymore, as he threw his two hands upward dramatically, "I agree with Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox. The manners of Americans are very unbecoming. It is sad, but very true. They are unbecoming at table, in the theater, on the street, and in general deportment and dress as well. Such manners must be corrected before Americans can hope to combine the grace of the Old World with the vigor of the new."

AT 95 SHE ASKS VOTES FOR WOMEN

Mrs. Susan Look Avery, Who Enlisted in the Cause 75 Years Ago, Still Is an Active Suffragist.

Louisville, Ky., June 30.—Mrs. Susan Look Avery, ninety-five years old, is the oldest suffragist and one of the most remarkable women of her years in the world. Within five years of rounding out a century, she has a grasp of the great affairs of the day that can be equalled by few men, and she passes her days in the pursuit of knowledge with a zest as keen as it was seventy-five years ago.
Mrs. Avery has just gone to her summer home at Wyoming, N. Y., to pass the heated term. This has been her custom for fifty-five years. On her way to Wyoming she stopped in Cincinnati to attend a meeting of suffragists. She was asked to say something about the cause of women's suffrage.
"I quit talking about suffrage seventy-five years ago and went to work for it," she said, with a smile.
Mrs. Avery's constant companion is her secretary, an English woman. Together they read, investigate, and discuss the great questions of the day.
Greater even than her zeal for suffrage is Mrs. Avery's zeal for the single tax. She is in constant correspondence with Daniel Keifer, chairman of the Fels single tax commission, and last November she went to Chicago to attend the banquet given in honor of Joseph Paine. At the banquet she delivered an address. She was introduced by Louis Folk. Clad in a gown of light silk and lace, her white hair crowning a face combining rare intelligence and strength, she rose to her full height and in a clear, strong voice gave utterance to her views on the subject to which she had given especial thought and energy.
Mrs. Avery attended many public meetings. She was a believer in free silver, in 1888 and wrote many articles expressing her views. With the exception of a slight deafness, Mrs. Avery's faculties are as good as ever. She enjoys excellent health. She rises early, being at the breakfast table before 10 o'clock every morning.
Mrs. Avery says there are more important questions before the world to-day than ever before.
