PROFIT TAFT COST BROTHER HALF MILLION

china should have been charged against Roosevelt. Senator Pomeroy asked how it could have been possible to spend more than $300,000 in the fight to elect Progressives to State and county offices and as delegates to the State convention.

"The force standing over to elect the Republican party in Ohio, I don't believe we would have accomplished much by electing Roosevelt delegates if we had left the party in the hands of the kind of Mr. Hanna as he is now. The result of seeing the party in Ohio reorganized. We made no effort to elect Roosevelt delegates to the State convention, believing that if the State went for Roosevelt in the primaries he would get the delegates-at-large.

"If there had been no desire to elect Roosevelt delegates," asked Senator Pomeroy, "would you have spent this $300,000 or any substantial part thereof to change the State organization?"

"Yes, if Mr. Taft had withdrawn from the race there and there had been no doubt but that the Roosevelt delegates would be elected, I think we still would have spent as much in an effort to take control from the State organization."

The committee, after examining Judge Lovett and Senator Scott as to 1904 campaign contributions, were little nearer definite knowledge of the contributors to the Harriman fund than before. Lovett told the committee that on the day on which Elias was to call for the money, Harriman left early for his country place, Arden, and turned the money, all but about $200 of which was in checks, over to Lovett to deliver to Brown.

Judge Lovett said the fund contained $250,000 in all. He could not remember any of the contributors. He had a vague recollection, he said, that one name was down as a contributor, but he requested the committee to excuse him from giving it. However, in line with the policy so far pursued of listening to and admitting to the record the slightest of hearsay evidence, the committee insisted upon knowing the name.

"Well, replied Lovett, 'the name I had in mind was W. K. Vanderbilt. It is a very vague recollection, and I give it with some doubt as to its accuracy.'

The committee failed to ask Judge Lovett whether he had any other recollection of who had arrived at this vague recollection or why he doubted its accuracy.

So far the committee has accounted for only $150,000 of the fund. It has been pretty well established that Harriman, Morgan, and H. McK. Twombly each contributed $50,000. It is believed that both Vanderbilt and Twombly contributed, as the two men were identical in their principal business interest. It is expected that the last $17,000 which Senator Dewey went to the Harriman fund, though this has not been definitely established.

Senator Pomeroy sought to establish through the testimony of Judge Lovett that Harriman had big interests at stake which might be materially affected by the administration following the election of 1904, seeking to have the inference drawn that fear of hostility was the principal cause for Harriman's interest in the campaign.

"Mr. Morgan was completing his work of organization and decentralizing his vast interests about this time?" he asked.

"Yes, in 1904."

"Yes, or in 1905."

"Oh, no. He had completed that long before 1904. He obtained control of the Union Pacific in 1907 or 1908, and the Southern Pacific was bought in 1901, so that he completed his task three years before 1904."

Chairman Charles D. Hilles of the Republican National Committee and former United States Senator, Taft and John D. Archbold, vice president of the Standard Oil Company, will testify before the committee to-day.

C. F. Taft Donations.

Mr. Taft prefaced his statement of contributions to the 1908 fund by explaining that he desired to have his brother's name on the list without any pecuniary obligation as the result of the campaign.

"I wished to obviate any influence which might be had on him from a monetary standpoint," he said. "My desire was that if he were elected, he should walk into the White House without any monetary obligation to, or any interest in, or any corporation. On this basis I was prepared to do the best I could."

Mr. Taft gave the following list of his contributions, following his brother's nomination in 1908:

Chairman Clapp asked Mr. Taft if he knew of any other contributions besides his own.

"I think some were sent in to me and turned over to my secretary to be forwarded by him to the National Committee," he said. He had no record of these contributions, however.

"Have you ever had occasion to inform yourself as to the total of your brother's campaign fund?" he was asked.

"I never did," he replied.

Mr. Taft's tabulation of his contribution to the late pre-convention campaign in behalf of his brother follows:

Summarizing his pre-convention expenditures, Mr. Taft showed that he had spent $400 for the pre-convention campaign in Ohio, $25,000 sent to McKinley for the national campaign, and $25,000 for various items, including the State Club contribution and the salary and expenses of his Washington correspondent.

A conflict with the statement of Senator Dixon developed in the testimony of Dan R. Hanna, of Cleveland, son of the late Mark Hanna, and who was the principal contributor in Ohio to Col. Roosevelt's pre-convention campaign.

Senator Dixon testified that Hanna had given his contributions in Washington. Hanna testified that he had given his contributions in Cleveland.

Mr. Hale Testifies.

Mathew Hale, of Boston, the Roosevelt leader in Massachusetts, showed that $71,443 had been spent by the Roosevelt organization there, of which amount the National Committee has contributed $23,134. Mr. Hale said that there may have been some small amounts raised by the small committees throughout the State and not turned in to him, but that from the frequency with which he received funds he did not believe a considerable amount had been raised.

Hale said most of the Roosevelt money had been spent in advertising, advertising in newspapers, and holding Roosevelt rallies, while the Taft people had spent the greater part of their money at the end of the campaign after Representative Gardner came up to Massachusetts.

Mr. Hale told the committee that a larger expenditure of money than ordinarily would have been called for was necessitated by two circumstances. In the first place, he said, much of the Roosevelt money was spent in shipping up the sentinels of the campaign after the Massachusetts primary law, a measure which was bitterly opposed by the Taft organization.

A second circumstance was that in the last majority fight in Boston, between two factions of Democrats, an exceptionally large sum of money had been spent, this fact raising the standard for expenditure of the campaign after primaries and securing the passage of the Massachusetts primary law, a measure which was bitterly opposed by the Taft organization.
