TRACK WALKERS OF THE ATLANTIC

Proving that they have not so quickly forgotten the lessons of the Titanic disaster, the steamship companies are now taking measures to safeguard their fleets during the coming iceberg season in the North Atlantic.

In England steps have been taken for the establishment of a permanent patrol system, the British Board of Trade and the steamship companies combining to pay the expenses of maintaining patrol vessels, equipped with powerful wireless installations, along the transatlantic lanes. One such vessel is to be placed in commission immediately, and more will follow.

Following the great ocean calamity of last April, the United States sent some of its scout cruisers to do this patrol work. But that was entirely a labor of love. The duty is one that belongs to a duty that they should have assumed long ago.

There is just as much reason for keeping the tracks used by ocean steamers clear of dangerous obstacles as there is for keeping railroad tracks clear and free for the safe passage of trains. No railroad takes it for granted that its tracks are at all times in a safe condition. On the contrary, the railroad employs track-walkers to patrol certain sections and give warning when danger presents itself. Had the necessity of taking similar precautions presented itself to steamship line managers even a year ago the greatest marine tragedy of modern times might not have been enacted.

Unique Ballot Box Goes to Boston D. A. R.

Composed of 280 Historic Pieces Donated by 60 Chapters from Different Sections—Wonderfully Fitted Together and Brilliantly Polished, the Box Is Priceless.

Boston, Feb. 22.—The most wonderful ballot box in the world is soon to become the property of the Massachusetts D. A. R. It is composed of 280 pieces of wood, every one of which has some historical value. As a work of art, this handsome box is worth hundreds of dollars. But even aside from its artistic worth, the box is priceless. It could never be duplicated.

For over a year and a half the pieces of wood for the box have been collecting. The wood, in large and small bits, came from sixty chapters of the D. A. R. and from ten individuals. It was gathered in all parts of Massachusetts and in many other States. A piece from some old house erected in the 1670's, a silver from an antique clock frame, a splinter from an historic tree, a shingle from a wooden roof, a scrap of flooring from a ship of war—piece by piece the 280 fragments came to Mrs. Charles H. Masury, of Danvers. As honorary State regent, Mrs. Masury had appointed a committee of one to receive the contributions. It was Capt. Charles H. Masury, however, who designed the box—a very laborious, intricate task. The wood came in all shapes but none of the pieces was large. Therefore, Capt. Masury was obliged to plan the box with the utmost care, fitting one bit of wood into another so that each might show to best advantage. The actual work on the box was done by a Salem cabinet maker, but it was done according to Capt. Masury's plans. A chart has been made of each side of the box and of the top. All the pieces of wood have been numbered on the chart, but not on the box itself.

By reference to the chart and to the memorandum book which accompanies it, one may tell at once the history of any given piece of wood.

Now that the box is finished, it will be presented publicly on March 3 to the Massachusetts D. A. R. at the new headquarters in the City of Boston. The box will doubtless come during the same month at the election in Worcester of the State regent. "Many a heartbeats will go into that ballot box," said Mrs. Masury the other afternoon.

Ornamental Appearance.

It is remarkable what a brilliant polish the ancient bits of wood were able to take. Of varied colors, from black to cherry, from golden brown to white, the highly polished pieces form a cabinet that would be an ornament to any room. At present the box occupies the place of honor in Mrs. Masury's parlor at Danvers, where it must feel at home before the big old-fashioned fireplace and among the myriad antique objects with which the room is filled. The house itself is well worthy to play the host even to such a collection of historical fragments. It was in the living room that Garrison and Phillips used to talk over politics with Mrs. Masury's father, before the civil war. And it was from this house that Garrison used to step across the road to an innocent looking cabin where the runaway slaves, rescued by the "underground railroad," used to find a refuge.

The box will be thoroughly appreciated by the patriotic society to which it is given. There are few corners indeed of Massachusetts that fall of representation in the cabinet's gleaming sides, and there are few historic spots in the country that have not contributed some souvenir, however tiny. As a practical object, too, the box will not lack appreciation. "At one of the conferences of the Massachusetts D. A. R. it became manifest that while its members were interested in 'Votes for Women' in its own particular sphere, it was necessary that some proper and becoming receptacle should be provided where the vote could be received." Capt. Masury humorously explains. It is John Adams chapter of Boston, of which Miss Floretta Vining is regent, that pays for the making of the box.

There is one bit of wood from the John Adams homestead in Quincy. Another from a tree in the Whittier garden at Amesbury. Still another from the Merriam's Olympia—Dewey's flagship—built in 1825 and burned in 1868 from the Royal house in Medford from the "Great Onabbin," the golden oak in the field; from the old State House, the house of Dorothy Quincy estate in Quincy, the old Quincy homestead—which was built in 1625 and burned in 1780 from the old South Meeting House in Boston. One fragment is from the barn of John and Hannah Goddard, where ammunition was secreted for Gen. Washington's army on Dorchester Heights. Old John Goddard put carpet on the floor of his oxen so that their plodding steps might not be heard, and conveyed the arms and ammunition by night in his ox cart to the waiting army. There is a piece from the "Augusta," Lord Howe's flagship, which was sunk in the battle of Red Bank, N. J., in 1777. There is a piece from the Elliott oak of Natick, under which John Elliott preached to the Indians. The old Concord bridge is represented, and the First Parish Church of Concord, within whose walls the first Provincial Congress was held, the Deborah Wheelock House of Exbridge, dating back to 1708, the British man-of-war Somerset, wrecked off Cape Cod in 1778, the Longfellow elm, the Washington elm, the Hancock tavern, Boston, which dates back to 1824. Nor has the Holmes House in Cambridge with its old-fashioned thatched roof which was the headquarters of Gen. Artemus Ward in 1775, nor Massachusetts Hall at Harvard, built in 1719 and used as a barracks in 1775, nor the apple tree from the homestead of Mary Draper of Roxbury, nor the Peck House of Attleboro, dating back to 1700. There is a fine bit from the Jonathan Edwards elm at Northampton, from a clock case—a very rare specimen—which dates back to 1720 and was made in England, from the Paul and Revere House, from the house of Abiah Folger Franklin of Nantucket—she who was the mother of Benjamin Franklin—from the house where Deborah Sampson and Chief Justice Cushing were born, from the frigate Constitution.

Relic of Prudence Wright.

There is also a bit from the dowry chest of Prudence Wright, which dates back to 1775. Prudence Wright lived in Pepperell, and one day when all the men except one very aged and feeble gentleman had gone to war she learned that a troop of British were preparing to take an important message to Gen. Gage. "The girls must do what the men would do," she said, and persuaded her companions to don their brothers' clothes, march with her to a turn in the road, arm themselves with long sticks that looked sufficiently like muskets, intercept the Tories—one of whom was the brother of Mistress Prudence—seize the enemy out with her to a turn in the road, and ride with it across country to Gen. Washington at Cambridge.

There is a piece of wood from the "Claremont" and the "Half Moon," two ships that were part of the Hudson-Fulton celebration; from the First Meeting House in Hingham—which was the first public house of worship in New England, its dates being 1664-1681; from the Gen. Benjamin Lincoln house in Hingham, dated 1690; from the famous Charter Oak; from the tree to which Mother Anne Lee hitched her horse in 1754 while she preached to the Shakers. Mother Lee lived in Shirley, Mass., and was one of the brave women who took supplies to the Americans at great risk to herself. There is a bit of wood also from the James Garrison House, dated 1683. There is a piece from the house in which the Indian massacre at Fort Maysen in Framingham, 1675-76.

From the Abraham Lincoln house in Springfield, Ill., there is a piece, from the old elm on Boston Common, there is another, from the Endicott pear tree, planted in Danvers in 1630 and still bearing, there is another, and from Parson Park's witch house in Danvers, which dates back to 1622, there is still another. There is a piece from Jefferson's desk, the wood having been taken from the spot where his arm rested when he was writing. There is a bit of the magnolia planted at Mount Vernon by Lafayette and of a magnolia planted at Mount Vernon by Washington. There is a piece of the platform on which President McKinley was inaugurated, from the live oak under which John Wesley preached in Georgia, from the lower panel of the south door of the John Hancock house in Boston—a bit of wood which was doubtless brushed by the dress of Dorothy Q., from the House of Seven Gables in Salem, from the Dean Winthrop house in Winthrop, from King's Chapel, Boston, from the old bell in Lexington from which the alarm was rung to call the Minute Men to Lexington Green on Nearly every period of American history is represented in this pot pourri of relics. The ballot box will be not only one of the most precious possessions of the D. A. R., but also one of the most precious possessions of the country.

PLAIN PUDDING WINS.

One Dish in Three Has No Brass Nor Rubber Ingredients.

From the New York World.

Never again will John A. Hines, Harry N. Reeves and Kirk Brown, members of a noonday luncheon group in the Montclair Club, of Montclair, N. J., act as judges at a cooking contest.

Several days ago three other members of the club, who had boasted that their respective wives were expert makers of rice pudding, agreed to submit examples of their art in a contest. Hines, Reeves and Brown were chosen as arbiters. Three dishes of rice pudding were borne to the club yesterday from the contestants' homes. The judges got to work with spoons.

"Fine!" said one judge. "Fi—hey! What's this?" And he dug a rusty pin from his dish.

"This pudding is just grand," began another judge. Then he paused, chewed convulsively and pulled a rubber band from between two of his teeth.

"Nothing but pudding here," said the eater of the third sample after microscopic search.

"She win!" cried his brother judge.

BAD MEN FEEL PAIN MORE.

Criminally Inclined Cannot Bear Bodily Suffering Well.

From the London Daily Mirror.

Does a bad man feel more pain than a man who leads an honest life? It has been stated, apropos the decision of the House of Commons to punish white slaves by flogging, that by a happy provision of nature the skin appears actually to become more sensitive as the moral sense becomes deadened. A doctor said that as a rule those who are criminally inclined bear pain or bodily suffering of any kind extremely bad. Men who are quite hardened on the moral side of their character seem to get more self-conscious about their physical feelings than ordinary men do. A man who is morally lax leads a loose life and destroys his nervous system. He feels pain much more acutely than a man of average temperate habits and a clear conscience.
