Dr. Mary Walker Brimming Over With Unique Ideas Pioneer Suffragist Calls at State Department on Secretary Daniels, but Meets Snag at White House. Indignant at Actions of Miss Zelle Emerson.

Dr. Mary Walker made her appearance at the White House and a number of the executive departments yesterday, just brimming over with ideas. At the State Department she demanded that Miss Zelle Emerson, the Michigan suffragist, who has just been released from a London jail, following her participation in the window-breaking campaign, be permitted to enter the United States and punished for her conduct abroad. Dr. Walker maintained that Miss Emerson had been guilty of a great offense against the United States by breaking a window in London while in the United States in peace. Incidentally, Dr. Walker declared that "such hoodlums as Mrs. Pankhurst should be forbidden to enter the United States, and that the immigration law, if it does not now prohibit their admission, should be amended by the Democratic Congress so that it would bar them from the United States."

From the State Department Dr. Walker went to see Secretary of the Navy Daniels. She urged Mr. Daniels to come to a local moving picture theater to listen to a speech she is to deliver there. Mr. Daniels found his engagements do not permit, though Dr. Walker assured him that the rest of the Cabinet would surely be there.

Dr. Walker also went to the White House, hoping to set forth her ideas before President Wilson, but was unable to gain an audience with Mr. Wilson.

Austrian people to disclose the facts of his son's death, but he absolutely declined. He has lost a good bit of his former boundless popularity as a result.

The fact is that one of the archduke's disolute companions made certain disclosures to Crown Prince Rudolf which proved that an insurmountable barrier existed between him and his inheritance, the throne of Austria. In short, that any affection between them as lovers was out of the question.

FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Reading in the "Muenchener Neueste Nachrichten," an account of how the aged Emperor Franz Josef of Austria, now 82, has been sold to the crown prince of the Holy Roman Empire, Ernst zu Braunschweig-Lueneburg (son of the Duke of Cumberland) to the only daughter of the German Kaiser, an event that will once more bring about the reunion of the Germanic peoples in the direct line which brought to his mind vividly the loss of his "direct" heir, I recall that the "true" mystery of the Meysing (a "hunting box" in the foothills of the Austrian Alps in the Salz Kammergut) is the darkest page of history in the annals of the Hapsburgs, and some of the harrowing details have been told by the crown prince even of some members of the Imperial family. It was on January 30, 1889, and the court was in residence in the palace of Schonbrunn, when a telegram was received stating that the prince had killed himself. Two days later the body arrived at the Hofburg in charge of the valet, and was deposited sans ceremony in the famous machine casket, the tomb of the Hapsburgs.

There had been a hunting party and a chase first in the meadow, then in the Alpine mountain goat at the Jagdschloss of Meysing, an estate owned by Crown Prince Rudolf, but never visited by his wife, Stefanie, daughter of the late King Leopold of the Belgians. The dinner after the day's sport was very uproarious, the archduke and his boon companions drinking heavily and deep. The personal valet of Rudolf heard a great deal of noise, but being used to his master's doings, did not pay much attention until continued loud moanings on the staircase caused him to open the door, where, to his indignation, he beheld the prince in a crouching form, the crown prince being carried upstairs. Those who bore the body, however, peremptorily ordered the servant to go back to his room, to remain until sent for. This the man did, and shortly thereafter he was taken to the bedside of his ill-fated master, who lingered several hours in an unconscious state.

M. J. J. who, by virtue of his high position, saw the body after it had been removed to the Hofburg at Vienna, was horrified to note that the crown prince's skull was broken, and that pieces of broken bottle glass protruded from them. The face was not recognizable, and two fingers of the right hand had been cut off. When the undertaker proceeded to dress the interment, the face and head were encased completely in a wax mask, in order to prevent the curious from seeing the terrible disfigurement, and to realize what a dreadful tragedy had been enacted.

The bereaved Emperor, who was told as gently as possible under such circumstances, the truth about the fatal injuries of his only son and heir, summoned a secret convocation, at which the details of that night's horror were disclosed. None but the men present at that meeting ever knew what really had happened.

One of the gamekeepers had been ordered at night's chase to appear at the hunting box on the morning following the tragedy. He did so, but was nonplussed to find everything about the place "quiet as death." Breathing in the prince's bedroom, he found the dying man and his valet.

Frightened almost out of his wits, he rushed from the room, trying to summon assistance, but none was in sight. Then, groping up the crown prince's bedroom, he found the dying man and his valet.

The aged Emperor was asked by the

Mr. Bryan replied very feelingly, emphasizing his desire, and that of the present administration, to do everything in his power to promote closer relations between the United States and its sister republics. He believed that the Pan-American Union was a strong agency in this direction, and he would endeavor to do everything in his power to promote closer relations between the United States and its sister republics.
