

START ON N. A. M. CHARGES JULY 8

Committee Hopes to Reach Phase of Lobby Uncovered by Mulhall by that Date.

MAY BE SEPARATE PROBE

Representative Shirley, One of Men Named, Will Offer Resolution to that Effect.

Spurred by a realization that the country will demand the most thoroughgoing investigation possible of the sensational charges made by Col. M. Mulhall...

Another interesting development last night was the announcement that Vice President Marshall will appear on the witness stand before the lobby investigators...

Although it was not contemplated that the investigation, which has been going on for nearly a month, should be resumed until July 8, Senator Overman announced yesterday afternoon that the committee will meet tomorrow morning...

The resolution will be referred to the committee on rules, of which Representative Robert L. Henry of Texas is chairman.

COMPTON TELLS OF N. A. M. WORK

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE.

The typewritten statement which Compton had prepared for him. A future meeting was decided upon. Compton took the statement and without showing its contents, had one of his friends, Vice President James Duncan, of the Federation, attach his name and the date to it as a means of identification.

On the following morning Compton and Gompers met again, and the former repeated his offer. Gompers expressed doubt as to Compton's authority to speak for the N. A. M. Finally he insisted that President Van Cleave, who then was in New York, should meet him personally and approve the proposition.

Continuing, Compton says: "In his effort to convince me that he was an authorized agent and representative of the National Association of Manufacturers, he showed me vouchers and warrants and receipts for money paid in his name as agent."

Mr. Brandenburg was very insistent that I should let him have a written statement. He said that unless he had it by the following day, Monday, it would be of no use to him.

"I immediately went to my room and there related to Mr. Duncan and Mrs. Huber every detail of the statements made in the conference with Mr. Brandenburg."

"The publication of the malicious and scurrilous attack in the National Association of Manufacturers' organ, the American Industries, followed a few days later, and made it quite clear that the purpose of Brandenburg had to do with the publication of a written statement for its publication as a sort of recantation or confession in connection therewith."

"So by devices ways I have come in view of the end of the period. Not far away is the final cessation of something mortal, that I know, but that mystery of the suspension of other things, immortal, is not yet made clear."

"There is nothing of the white in this. Empty, broken as I am, I have nothing to ask. Nothing I might achieve would matter in a little while and this what I write is, after all, nothing more than my retrospective thoughts expressed through the accustomed medium of my pen. Wisdom is cumulative, and out of abundance I might endow posterity. Vengeance by the law of compensation overreaches the grave, and I might undo more men a score of times than I regret my passing. Justice is exquisitely elusive, and I might with a truth told here and there palliate many a grave miscarriage. But why? Why should I, having driven to my own grave, charge the world with my own sins?"

"Each man in his way, be it great or small, exists in an attitude toward the world at large, in a second attitude toward his immediate associates, and in a third and almost invariably different—very different—attitude before his own inner consciousness. Stripped of the sophistry which serves as a mental lubricant when in activity, I stand at halt, contemplating my own ego."

"I see just of power that has triumphed again and again. And there it abruptly stopped."

Gompers showed his associates the identical paper handed him by Brandenburg, and which had been indorsed and dated by James Duncan.

Steward a glistering tear stealing down her cheek. "We want the singers," came in imperative tones from the audience.

The six old ladies demurred once more, but softly, almost imperceptibly, the first of the six ladies rose and began playing "Rally Round the Flag."

"Rally round the flag," echoed the old boys, urging the ladies on.

As softly as it had started the tune, the band stopped. And then, softly, the six ladies rose and in sweet, low, trembling voices Mrs. Stewart began the song and the others joined in.

Silence settled over the tent, save for those six voices.

Five thousand veterans bent forward eagerly. Tears crept into the eyes of the survivors as they listened rapturously to the words of the song with which these voices had greeted them fifty years ago. They sang it through these six "girls of '61," and though songs have frequently been better sung, never has one been so effectively rendered as this one, falling upon the ears of grizzled veterans who were listening back fifty years.

After the ladies had concluded the men tried to sing. They had the assistance of the band, but the result bore no comparison with the haunting melody of the old ladies.

Confederate Locate Lines. A big delegation of ex-Confederates from Virginia started out about 4 a. m. to locate their lines in the big battle or half a century ago. Spanglers Woods, where Pickett's charge was organized, was soon spotted, and with a yell the former Johnnies broke for the spot. Arrived there, the yell was thrice repeated, and then the ancient musicians of the party, equipped with flutes and drum, struck up "Dixie."

The old boys in Blue, awakened from their slumbers by vivid recollections of that old war cry, stirred uneasily, rose up hurriedly, with what imaginations may be surmised, and darted from their tents, and then the situation dawned upon them.

A few minutes later the reveille gun was sounded and Old Glory was broken from the mast, hoisted at camp headquarters to the tune of the "Star Spangled Banner."

It was the cue for the Union veterans to get busy, and on the instant, from street after street in the camp there came bursts of cheering, followed by a quick joining of the national melody, until, in three minutes, practically the entire camp, Johnnies as well as Yankees, were lustily singing the hymn.

All hands fell to at breakfast, which in picturesque service at the foot of each camp street, the veterans gathered with the tin cups for coffee, while bacon and eggs, fruit and cereals are served out from the well-stocked commissary department.

Breakfast was not over when the booming of fourteen guns, fired by Battery B, of the Third United States Artillery, announced the taking over by the command of the camp by Brig. Gen. Hunter Liggett, of the Army War College. Battery B incidentally enjoys the proud distinction of being the lineal descendant of Calhoun's Battery which fired the opening shot of the battle of Gettysburg, fifty years ago today. Incidentally again, Lieut. Simon Bolivar Buckner, U. S. A., son of the old Confederate leader, has been assigned as adjutant by Gen. Liggett.

"This will be in no sense a military camp," said Gen. Liggett this morning. "There will be only such discipline here as will add to the comfort, convenience, and happiness of the old soldiers who are quartered here for the week. They have earned the right to be above the ordinary discipline of a military camp."

With the day well started, guns began to boom at intervals as Governors of States came into camp. Gov. Tener of Pennsylvania received the customary salute, as did also Gov. McGovern of Wisconsin. In addition to these Gov. Clark of Iowa and Hanna of North Dakota are now on the ground, together with Gov. Sulzer of New York, who got in late this afternoon. When the hosts have gathered out of the city, thirty-five State Executives here in the camp. Secretary of War Garrison will arrive tomorrow, and be quartered at the State College, just outside of Gettysburg.

The camp is now moving under an administration as smooth as the efficient regulations of the United States Army can make it. Maj. P. C. Hutton, one of the distinguished surgeons of the service, has assumed personal charge of the sanitary arrangements. A complete system of water mains and drainage has been established, seven hospitals are in operation, there is an efficient police system, automobile ambulance service, incinerating plant for quick disposal of garbage and refuse, and a telephone service of which it is sufficient to say that calls were handled out of the camp today. Among the distinguished arrivals during the day were John Francis Key, grandson of Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star Spangled Banner. Mr. Key is a veteran of the Confederacy; he is eighty-two years old, and is an inmate of the Home for Soldiers, Rikerville, Md.

The widow of Gen. Longstreet also arrived in camp today and will be entertained specially tomorrow afternoon by her husband's old rival in the field, Gen. Daniel R. Sickles.

All roads lead today to the headquarters of Carr's Brigade, in the old Rogers House, where Gen. Sickles is living during the anniversary. A stream of veterans, Union and Confederate, began calling at the general's quarters in the early morning, and all through the day the reception continued. Pickett's men, Early's men from Hill's Corps, Longstreet's veterans, former foes from every quarter of the South, clamored for the opportunity to shake the general's hand.

"It is overwhelming," said Gen. Sickles. "And yet I am glad to have the boys come, and especially those from the South."

A group of veterans from Virginia, Georgia, Texas, North Carolina, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and New York burst in upon the general only in the day and demanded that he pose for a picture with them.

"But I find it rather difficult to walk," boys, persisted the general. "Shucks," cried a big Texan. "Lead a hand, boys."

They seized the disabled commander bodily and tenderly carried him across the road to where a monument marks the spot of the first day's fighting, and there, with Sickles in the center of the group, composed of Blues and Grays, they were snapped.

Almost 10,000 of the former Confederates are now on the ground and encamped in sight of Spangler's Woods. They have spent almost the entire day tramping over the field, scores of inspiring scenes marked the arrival. Former Union men invariably were at the station to meet them. As the trains came to a standstill they fell into each other's arms.

Photo is Taken.

CONGRESS OFFICIALLY WILL BE REPRESENTED

Congress will be officially represented at Gettysburg by thirty members, who will leave Washington on a special train in charge of Charles B. Higgins, Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, at 9 o'clock Thursday morning.

The party will arrive at Gettysburg at noon and leave at midnight, reaching Washington early July 4. The party comprises Vice President Marshall, Senators Shirley, Oliver, Works, Thornton, Bradley, Nelson, Robinson, and Newlands, Speaker Cannon, and Representatives Talbot, Golden, Stedman, Kilpatrick, Taylor of Alabama, Mendell, Estepinal, Hulings, Graham, Dyer, Booher, Johnson of Kentucky, Dickson, Flood, Burke, Austin, Lee, Moore, Brodbeck, Chaplain Couden, Postmaster Dunbar, and Col. Gordon, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House.

The Congressional party will be received on the battleground by the Gettysburg commission.

President Wilson will go to Gettysburg by train on Friday, July 4, and, following his speech to the veterans, will continue northward to Cornish, N. H., where he will spend a few days with his family.

The President probably will reach Cornish on Saturday, remaining there until Sunday night, when he will start back to Washington, reaching the White House on Monday morning.

INSURGENTS TAKE GUAYMAS. Mexican Federalists Pressed to Waterfront and Finally Lose City.

Douglas, Ariz., June 28.—"Guaymas has fallen. Everything in our hands." This was the brief message received shortly before noon today by the Constitutionalist Junta from Hermosillo.

An earlier dispatch stated that only the water front and the barracks at Guaymas were in the hands of the Federalists today. The same dispatch said that water was scarce in the barracks, and that a portion of the small garrison had deserted last night and taken to boats in the harbor.

Last year the United States Department of Agriculture issued more than 2,000,000 copies of bulletins, reports, circulars, etc.

A SURE CURE TRY IT

Is your head broken at a low fever? Is it your head broken at a low fever? Is it your head broken at a low fever?

Call up Main 1419 for All Kinds of Printing Supplies.

J. W. JORDAN 623 D Street N. W.

QUALITY MEATS

And Provisions of all kinds. Try our plump home-dressed poultry.

TORRE 901 U St. N. W. Phone N. 507.

COMPTON TELLS OF N. A. M. WORK

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE.

The typewritten statement which Compton had prepared for him. A future meeting was decided upon. Compton took the statement and without showing its contents, had one of his friends, Vice President James Duncan, of the Federation, attach his name and the date to it as a means of identification.

Continuing, Compton says: "In his effort to convince me that he was an authorized agent and representative of the National Association of Manufacturers, he showed me vouchers and warrants and receipts for money paid in his name as agent."

Mr. Brandenburg was very insistent that I should let him have a written statement. He said that unless he had it by the following day, Monday, it would be of no use to him.

"I immediately went to my room and there related to Mr. Duncan and Mrs. Huber every detail of the statements made in the conference with Mr. Brandenburg."

"The publication of the malicious and scurrilous attack in the National Association of Manufacturers' organ, the American Industries, followed a few days later, and made it quite clear that the purpose of Brandenburg had to do with the publication of a written statement for its publication as a sort of recantation or confession in connection therewith."

"So by devices ways I have come in view of the end of the period. Not far away is the final cessation of something mortal, that I know, but that mystery of the suspension of other things, immortal, is not yet made clear."

"There is nothing of the white in this. Empty, broken as I am, I have nothing to ask. Nothing I might achieve would matter in a little while and this what I write is, after all, nothing more than my retrospective thoughts expressed through the accustomed medium of my pen. Wisdom is cumulative, and out of abundance I might endow posterity. Vengeance by the law of compensation overreaches the grave, and I might undo more men a score of times than I regret my passing. Justice is exquisitely elusive, and I might with a truth told here and there palliate many a grave miscarriage. But why? Why should I, having driven to my own grave, charge the world with my own sins?"

"Each man in his way, be it great or small, exists in an attitude toward the world at large, in a second attitude toward his immediate associates, and in a third and almost invariably different—very different—attitude before his own inner consciousness. Stripped of the sophistry which serves as a mental lubricant when in activity, I stand at halt, contemplating my own ego."

"I see just of power that has triumphed again and again. And there it abruptly stopped."

Gompers showed his associates the identical paper handed him by Brandenburg, and which had been indorsed and dated by James Duncan.

Steward a glistering tear stealing down her cheek. "We want the singers," came in imperative tones from the audience.

The six old ladies demurred once more, but softly, almost imperceptibly, the first of the six ladies rose and began playing "Rally Round the Flag."

"Rally round the flag," echoed the old boys, urging the ladies on.

As softly as it had started the tune, the band stopped. And then, softly, the six ladies rose and in sweet, low, trembling voices Mrs. Stewart began the song and the others joined in.

Silence settled over the tent, save for those six voices.

Five thousand veterans bent forward eagerly. Tears crept into the eyes of the survivors as they listened rapturously to the words of the song with which these voices had greeted them fifty years ago. They sang it through these six "girls of '61," and though songs have frequently been better sung, never has one been so effectively rendered as this one, falling upon the ears of grizzled veterans who were listening back fifty years.

After the ladies had concluded the men tried to sing. They had the assistance of the band, but the result bore no comparison with the haunting melody of the old ladies.

Confederate Locate Lines. A big delegation of ex-Confederates from Virginia started out about 4 a. m. to locate their lines in the big battle or half a century ago. Spanglers Woods, where Pickett's charge was organized, was soon spotted, and with a yell the former Johnnies broke for the spot. Arrived there, the yell was thrice repeated, and then the ancient musicians of the party, equipped with flutes and drum, struck up "Dixie."

The old boys in Blue, awakened from their slumbers by vivid recollections of that old war cry, stirred uneasily, rose up hurriedly, with what imaginations may be surmised, and darted from their tents, and then the situation dawned upon them.

A few minutes later the reveille gun was sounded and Old Glory was broken from the mast, hoisted at camp headquarters to the tune of the "Star Spangled Banner."

It was the cue for the Union veterans to get busy, and on the instant, from street after street in the camp there came bursts of cheering, followed by a quick joining of the national melody, until, in three minutes, practically the entire camp, Johnnies as well as Yankees, were lustily singing the hymn.

All hands fell to at breakfast, which in picturesque service at the foot of each camp street, the veterans gathered with the tin cups for coffee, while bacon and eggs, fruit and cereals are served out from the well-stocked commissary department.

Breakfast was not over when the booming of fourteen guns, fired by Battery B, of the Third United States Artillery, announced the taking over by the command of the camp by Brig. Gen. Hunter Liggett, of the Army War College. Battery B incidentally enjoys the proud distinction of being the lineal descendant of Calhoun's Battery which fired the opening shot of the battle of Gettysburg, fifty years ago today. Incidentally again, Lieut. Simon Bolivar Buckner, U. S. A., son of the old Confederate leader, has been assigned as adjutant by Gen. Liggett.

"This will be in no sense a military camp," said Gen. Liggett this morning. "There will be only such discipline here as will add to the comfort, convenience, and happiness of the old soldiers who are quartered here for the week. They have earned the right to be above the ordinary discipline of a military camp."

With the day well started, guns began to boom at intervals as Governors of States came into camp. Gov. Tener of Pennsylvania received the customary salute, as did also Gov. McGovern of Wisconsin. In addition to these Gov. Clark of Iowa and Hanna of North Dakota are now on the ground, together with Gov. Sulzer of New York, who got in late this afternoon. When the hosts have gathered out of the city, thirty-five State Executives here in the camp. Secretary of War Garrison will arrive tomorrow, and be quartered at the State College, just outside of Gettysburg.

The camp is now moving under an administration as smooth as the efficient regulations of the United States Army can make it. Maj. P. C. Hutton, one of the distinguished surgeons of the service, has assumed personal charge of the sanitary arrangements. A complete system of water mains and drainage has been established, seven hospitals are in operation, there is an efficient police system, automobile ambulance service, incinerating plant for quick disposal of garbage and refuse, and a telephone service of which it is sufficient to say that calls were handled out of the camp today. Among the distinguished arrivals during the day were John Francis Key, grandson of Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star Spangled Banner. Mr. Key is a veteran of the Confederacy; he is eighty-two years old, and is an inmate of the Home for Soldiers, Rikerville, Md.

The widow of Gen. Longstreet also arrived in camp today and will be entertained specially tomorrow afternoon by her husband's old rival in the field, Gen. Daniel R. Sickles.

All roads lead today to the headquarters of Carr's Brigade, in the old Rogers House, where Gen. Sickles is living during the anniversary. A stream of veterans, Union and Confederate, began calling at the general's quarters in the early morning, and all through the day the reception continued. Pickett's men, Early's men from Hill's Corps, Longstreet's veterans, former foes from every quarter of the South, clamored for the opportunity to shake the general's hand.

"It is overwhelming," said Gen. Sickles. "And yet I am glad to have the boys come, and especially those from the South."

A group of veterans from Virginia, Georgia, Texas, North Carolina, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and New York burst in upon the general only in the day and demanded that he pose for a picture with them.

"But I find it rather difficult to walk," boys, persisted the general. "Shucks," cried a big Texan. "Lead a hand, boys."

They seized the disabled commander bodily and tenderly carried him across the road to where a monument marks the spot of the first day's fighting, and there, with Sickles in the center of the group, composed of Blues and Grays, they were snapped.

COMPTON TELLS OF N. A. M. WORK

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE.

The typewritten statement which Compton had prepared for him. A future meeting was decided upon. Compton took the statement and without showing its contents, had one of his friends, Vice President James Duncan, of the Federation, attach his name and the date to it as a means of identification.

Continuing, Compton says: "In his effort to convince me that he was an authorized agent and representative of the National Association of Manufacturers, he showed me vouchers and warrants and receipts for money paid in his name as agent."

Mr. Brandenburg was very insistent that I should let him have a written statement. He said that unless he had it by the following day, Monday, it would be of no use to him.

"I immediately went to my room and there related to Mr. Duncan and Mrs. Huber every detail of the statements made in the conference with Mr. Brandenburg."

"The publication of the malicious and scurrilous attack in the National Association of Manufacturers' organ, the American Industries, followed a few days later, and made it quite clear that the purpose of Brandenburg had to do with the publication of a written statement for its publication as a sort of recantation or confession in connection therewith."

"So by devices ways I have come in view of the end of the period. Not far away is the final cessation of something mortal, that I know, but that mystery of the suspension of other things, immortal, is not yet made clear."

"There is nothing of the white in this. Empty, broken as I am, I have nothing to ask. Nothing I might achieve would matter in a little while and this what I write is, after all, nothing more than my retrospective thoughts expressed through the accustomed medium of my pen. Wisdom is cumulative, and out of abundance I might endow posterity. Vengeance by the law of compensation overreaches the grave, and I might undo more men a score of times than I regret my passing. Justice is exquisitely elusive, and I might with a truth told here and there palliate many a grave miscarriage. But why? Why should I, having driven to my own grave, charge the world with my own sins?"

"Each man in his way, be it great or small, exists in an attitude toward the world at large, in a second attitude toward his immediate associates, and in a third and almost invariably different—very different—attitude before his own inner consciousness. Stripped of the sophistry which serves as a mental lubricant when in activity, I stand at halt, contemplating my own ego."

"I see just of power that has triumphed again and again. And there it abruptly stopped."

Gompers showed his associates the identical paper handed him by Brandenburg, and which had been indorsed and dated by James Duncan.

Steward a glistering tear stealing down her cheek. "We want the singers," came in imperative tones from the audience.

The six old ladies demurred once more, but softly, almost imperceptibly, the first of the six ladies rose and began playing "Rally Round the Flag."

"Rally round the flag," echoed the old boys, urging the ladies on.

As softly as it had started the tune, the band stopped. And then, softly, the six ladies rose and in sweet, low, trembling voices Mrs. Stewart began the song and the others joined in.

Silence settled over the tent, save for those six voices.

Five thousand veterans bent forward eagerly. Tears crept into the eyes of the survivors as they listened rapturously to the words of the song with which these voices had greeted them fifty years ago. They sang it through these six "girls of '61," and though songs have frequently been better sung, never has one been so effectively rendered as this one, falling upon the ears of grizzled veterans who were listening back fifty years.

After the ladies had concluded the men tried to sing. They had the assistance of the band, but the result bore no comparison with the haunting melody of the old ladies.

Confederate Locate Lines. A big delegation of ex-Confederates from Virginia started out about 4 a. m. to locate their lines in the big battle or half a century ago. Spanglers Woods, where Pickett's charge was organized, was soon spotted, and with a yell the former Johnnies broke for the spot. Arrived there, the yell was thrice repeated, and then the ancient musicians of the party, equipped with flutes and drum, struck up "Dixie."

The old boys in Blue, awakened from their slumbers by vivid recollections of that old war cry, stirred uneasily, rose up hurriedly, with what imaginations may be surmised, and darted from their tents, and then the situation dawned upon them.

A few minutes later the reveille gun was sounded and Old Glory was broken from the mast, hoisted at camp headquarters to the tune of the "Star Spangled Banner."

It was the cue for the Union veterans to get busy, and on the instant, from street after street in the camp there came bursts of cheering, followed by a quick joining of the national melody, until, in three minutes, practically the entire camp, Johnnies as well as Yankees, were lustily singing the hymn.

All hands fell to at breakfast, which in picturesque service at the foot of each camp street, the veterans gathered with the tin cups for coffee, while bacon and eggs, fruit and cereals are served out from the well-stocked commissary department.

Breakfast was not over when the booming of fourteen guns, fired by Battery B, of the Third United States Artillery, announced the taking over by the command of the camp by Brig. Gen. Hunter Liggett, of the Army War College. Battery B incidentally enjoys the proud distinction of being the lineal descendant of Calhoun's Battery which fired the opening shot of the battle of Gettysburg, fifty years ago today. Incidentally again, Lieut. Simon Bolivar Buckner, U. S. A., son of the old Confederate leader, has been assigned as adjutant by Gen. Liggett.

"This will be in no sense a military camp," said Gen. Liggett this morning. "There will be only such discipline here as will add to the comfort, convenience, and happiness of the old soldiers who are quartered here for the week. They have earned the right to be above the ordinary discipline of a military camp."

With the day well started, guns began to boom at intervals as Governors of States came into camp. Gov. Tener of Pennsylvania received the customary salute, as did also Gov. McGovern of Wisconsin. In addition to these Gov. Clark of Iowa and Hanna of North Dakota are now on the ground, together with Gov. Sulzer of New York, who got in late this afternoon. When the hosts have gathered out of the city, thirty-five State Executives here in the camp. Secretary of War Garrison will arrive tomorrow, and be quartered at the State College, just outside of Gettysburg.

The camp is now moving under an administration as smooth as the efficient regulations of the United States Army can make it. Maj. P. C. Hutton, one of the distinguished surgeons of the service, has assumed personal charge of the sanitary arrangements. A complete system of water mains and drainage has been established, seven hospitals are in operation, there is an efficient police system, automobile ambulance service, incinerating plant for quick disposal of garbage and refuse, and a telephone service of which it is sufficient to say that calls were handled out of the camp today. Among the distinguished arrivals during the day were John Francis Key, grandson of Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star Spangled Banner. Mr. Key is a veteran of the Confederacy; he is eighty-two years old, and is an inmate of the Home for Soldiers, Rikerville, Md.

The widow of Gen. Longstreet also arrived in camp today and will be entertained specially tomorrow afternoon by her husband's old rival in the field, Gen. Daniel R. Sickles.

All roads lead today to the headquarters of Carr's Brigade, in the old Rogers House, where Gen. Sickles is living during the anniversary. A stream of veterans, Union and Confederate, began calling at the general's quarters in the early morning, and all through the day the reception continued. Pickett's men, Early's men from Hill's Corps, Longstreet's veterans, former foes from every quarter of the South, clamored for the opportunity to shake the general's hand.

"It is overwhelming," said Gen. Sickles. "And yet I am glad to have the boys come, and especially those from the South."

A group of veterans from Virginia, Georgia, Texas, North Carolina, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and New York burst in upon the general only in the day and demanded that he pose for a picture with them.

"But I find it rather difficult to walk," boys, persisted the general. "Shucks," cried a big Texan. "Lead a hand, boys."

They seized the disabled commander bodily and tenderly carried him across the road to where a monument marks the spot of the first day's fighting, and there, with Sickles in the center of the group, composed of Blues and Grays, they were snapped.

Unsurpassed in quality. Brewed from the finest of materials. Let the flavor prove it. First sold as a draught beer. Now sold everywhere in bottles. At the best hotels, cafes and clubs. Or delivered to your kitchen door in cases. ANHEUSER-BUSCH BRANCH Distributors WASHINGTON, D. C.

ANHEUSER-BUSCH'S ST. LOUIS FAUST BEER

Forty Beaches of Jersey "The Fourth" wait your coming on

A Friday Fourth means a week-end holiday. It is a welcome break in the working days of early Summer. It's a bracer that tides over until the real vacation. It is so easy to get to the Shore. Early afternoon trains of Thursday set you down at Long Branch, Asbury Park, Spring Lake, and all the intermediate points on the Upper Coast as far south as Point Pleasant and the Barnegats in the early evening.

It's a Matter of a Few Hours to Atlantic City by through train. There are morning and afternoon connecting trains via Delaware River Bridge all-rail route. Return trains equally as convenient with one for the late-stayer at 9:00 o'clock at night.

Then there are good connections via Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, for Ocean City, Sea Isle City, Stone Harbor, Wildwood, and Cape May. This train service is available from Union Station.

Every Jersey Beach Honors the Fourth Ask a Ticket Agent for rates and time of trains. Telephone "Main 5350" T. L. LIPRETT, District Passenger Solicitor, 15th and G Streets, N. W., Washington, D. C.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD

THE MOST POPULAR CIGAR IN WASHINGTON "OFTY," FIVE CENTS MADE IN THE Offtender's Quality Shop 508 9th Street

The New All-Oak Roller Bearing Transfer Case Special Lot, $9.00

The Melton-Rhodes Co., 11th and H Streets N. W. MAIN 7012

BABEK for Chills and Fever CONTAINS NO QUININE. Call up Main 1419 for All Kinds of Printing Supplies. J. W. JORDAN 623 D Street N. W. QUALITY MEATS And Provisions of all kinds. Try our plump home-dressed poultry. TORRE 901 U St. N. W. Phone N. 507.

Shopping with the Belle in the olden days meant a carriage and pair, and a day among the shops. Shopping with the Belle today means staying comfortably in your own home and using the Bell Telephone. All good stores have Bell Telephone Service. When you telephone—write The Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company

TASTE SO GOOD JANE'S Chocolates and Bonbons 514 NINTH STREET N. W.

I Am the Circular Letter I'm an important link between manufacturer and consumer. The message you intrust to my care is always read, because I carry it in a clean-cut, inviting style. There are not blurred words, no blotches in my make-up. This is due to the superior process that makes me look like a type-written letter. Try me. I'll make good. Alford Letter Company, New Address: 607 15th Street N. W. Second Floor Over Ford & Graham Dairy Lunch, Opposite U. S. Treasury. Phone Main 7506.

ANYTHING WHERE TIME BY VAN EMON'S Lincoln Park Pharmacy 13th and East Capitol Sts. Day Phone L. 1104-2774 Night Phone L. 1125