THE WAR DAY BY DAY Fifty Years Ago.

July 29, 1864—Federal Cavalry Raiders Under Gen. George Stoneman Cut the Railroad East of Macon, Ga., and Advanced to Within Twelve Miles of City—An Attempt to Release the Prisoners at Macon and Andersonville.

Fifty years ago today Federal cavalry raiders under Gen. George Stoneman cut the railroad east of Macon, Ga., and advanced to within twelve miles of the city.

The raid was in its inception, one of the boldest undertakings of the war. Cutting loose from Gen. W. T. Sherman's army besieging Atlanta, and circling far to the east, Stoneman intended first to cripple the Confederate communications, then to capture Macon and release the prisoners there, and finally, if possible, to swing yet further South, and set free the 24,000 Union prisoners in the stockades at Andersonville.

Primarily the raid was merely to cut the communications of Gen. J. B. Hood, who was striving to hold Atlanta against the double thrust of the Union armies. Already one of the three railroads in Hood's rear that which ran east to Augusta, had been destroyed for fully thirty miles.

The two other roads ran over one track as far as East Point, about six miles southwest from Atlanta, and thence to Macon, where the great Confederate arsenal, the other continuing southwest to Pensacola, Fla., and thence to the Gulf of Mexico.

The first was commanded by Gen. Stoneman, and consisted of three brigades of cavalry under Cols. James Bidwell, Silas Adams, and Horace Capron, and two regiments of the twenty-fourth Indiana Battery, under Capt. Hardy. The total strength of the command was just 3,000 men.

Gen. E. M. McCook commanded the Second Cavalry detachment. It comprised the brigades of Col. John T. Croton, Lieut. Col. H. P. Lamson, and Col. Thomas J. Harrison, and a section of the Eighteenth Indiana Battery under Lieut. M. J. Miller, together about 3,000 strong.

McCook cut to pieces. McCook marched down the west bank of the Chattahoochee River, and crossing on July 28 just below Campbelltown, fifteen miles southwest from Atlanta, succeeded in reaching the Macon road at Lovejoy's on the 29th, having previously cut the other road at Palmetto. At Lovejoy, which is thirty miles south of Atlanta, the train was broken up for nearly three miles, telegraph wires were removed for five miles, two trains, over 300 wagons, and 100 bales of cotton were burned, and fully 50 wounded prisoners were taken.

Having completed the work assigned him, Gen. McCook now started to retrace his way to the west, and by the aid of his men and made comparatively slow progress, while, on the other hand, Confederate cavalry was rapidly riding against him from several directions.

DR. REISINGER TALKS TO KEEP WELL SOCIETY

Says Food and Cleanliness Are Great Preventative Agents in War on Disease.

Emory W. Reisinger, associate professor of anatomy at Georgetown University, was the chief speaker at a meeting of the Keep Well Society at Foundry Church, Sixteenth and Church streets northwest, last night.

"Food and cleanliness," said Dr. Reisinger, "are the great preventative agents to be used in fighting disease. A window should be screened, houses should have cement floors, clean attendants, proper toilets, and regular inspection.

Did you ever see an abattoir? I hope not. If you had, I fear you would leave here tonight a vegetarian. Why should not all slaughter houses be properly drained, cleaned, and kept? They never will be until the public demands it.
