Three Smart Women Sketched at the Auteuil Races

These three smart French costumes were sketched at the races at Auteuil before any clouds of war had complicated the dress situation in Paris. On the right is a very simple frock of blue satin, with a band of tucking at the bottom of the skirt, and a little laced mull guimpe. In the center is a cloak of lace, trimmed with fur and with a silk cord belt that holds in the fullness low on the hips. On the left is a linen frock, with pointed scallops and a wide blue sash.

Cooking with Stock.

There is quite a knack in being able to cook with stock—not so much in being able to use stock to advantage in preparing tasty dishes, but in being able to plan so that when you need it you will have the stock on hand. There are a great many sauces, and a great many recipes for preparing vegetables and soups that call for a cup or a half-cup of meat stock, and, of course, in order to supply this it would never be worth while to prepare the meat specially. The thing to do is to save a little of the liquor from cooked meat or soup bones for use in these recipes.

For instance, when you prepare a fricassee chicken, the temptation usually is to make a rich chicken gravy from the water in which the chicken is stewed or to save it all for chicken soup. The cook who has her eye to the possibilities of stock saves a little of this chicken juice, a half cupful or a cupful and the gravy or the soup is very little weaker for this loss. Now with the possible cupful of stock you can make a white sauce that is vastly superior to the sauce made simply from milk or water. It can flavor many sorts of vegetables or you can have the foundation and flavoring for several interesting soups.
 White sauce with stock—Heat a cupful of white stock—chicken or mutton stock—over boiling water. Beat two tablespoonfuls of flour and one tablespoonful of butter to a cream and stir into the heated stock. Cook ten minutes and then flavor with one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper with a little chopped parsley or onion juice if desired. This sauce is especially good served with boiled onions, cauliflower, or any other vegetables when there is to be no meat at the same meal.
 Rice cooked with stock—A delicious luncheon dish is made with rice cooked very light and flaky to which is added hot white stock, a little butter, pepper and salt and chopped cooked green peppers, in the proportion of two tablespoonfuls of the chopped peppers to every cupful of cooked rice used.
 Other ways to use stock to advantage are in preparing bread dressing for a roast, in mixing up the rice or bread dressing for cooked stuffed tomatoes, or peppers, or in making a vegetable puree. Of course, as far as actual nourishment goes, the housewife might as well serve all the stock left from a stew or a soup home in gravy or soup as to rob the gravy or the soup for the sake of some other dish. It isn't at all a matter of actual nutritive value, it is a question of stretching out the meat flavor and now, when meat prices are soaring, that is something that every housewife ought to be glad to do.
 Frances Marshall will be glad to answer in this column any questions concerning household subjects.

APRON-STRING SASH.

This apron-string sash is a quaint little fashion feature that is becoming popular. The "strings" begin at the sides of the waist line, fastened by a flower buckle or button, and extend in a loose knot about six or eight inches below the center normal waist line in the back. These apron strings are found upon evening dresses as well as upon afternoon dresses. Usually, in both instances, they are of black velvet.

Another feature of evening gowns just as inconspicuous as apron strings, and equally effective, is the vest girle. No one would expect such a girle to venture outside the tailored lines, but it is to be found upon the most staid and light-colored frocks. The girle is usually of a contrasting color, although it sometimes matches the material, and comes up very high in the front, making the entire bodice closely resemble the frock of a Swiss peasant. The very center front is fastened by buttons and buttonholes, and the lower part of this opening is usually shaped so that buttons and buttonholes slope away from each other, and the girle itself falls to meet, leaving about two or three of the buttons "unbuttoned" or, rather, "unbutton-held." The back of the girle is wide and somewhat crushed, but there is no suggestion of the point which characterizes the front and gives the vest effect.

EYE STRAIN AND TROUBLE IT CAUSES

Few persons realize how much eye trouble comes directly from overexposure to light and to too confining use.
 You should not think that just because you are not far-sighted and do not have to stoop to your work your eyes are not overstrained. For eyes that are neither far-sighted nor short-sighted can be easily strained. Perhaps the effect of this abuse comes in a dull headache, nervousness or general fatigue.

The next time you have a headache that you cannot account for stop and think whether you have not abused your eyes the day before. In a surprisingly number of cases you will recall that the day before the headache you sat up writing letters by an inadequate light after the family had gone to bed; that you insisted on doing needlework on the piazza an hour after the twilight had begun to come, or that you sat up half the night to read a book.
 Do not think that the only exercises that strain the eyes are so-called close application. Long hours spent over the preserving kettle, with the steam rising before the eyes, are quite as harmful to the eyes as is fine needlework.

Famous Women Her Birthday and Yours

Sophia Smith.

One hundred and eighteen years ago today there was born in New England a woman whose name was destined to be taken by one of the largest and most famous of American women's colleges. This was Sophia Smith, the New England woman by whose bounty Smith College, at Northampton, Mass., came into being.
 Sophia Smith was the niece of Oliver Smith, who founded the so-called Smith charities in Northampton, Mass., for the purpose of providing resources for young men and women contemplating marriage. The encouragement of marriage was one of Oliver Smith's favorite hobbies, but strangely enough his celebrated niece remained a spinster. In fact, of Oliver Smith's seven nieces and nephews only one married and in the course of time these old maids and old bachelors died off leaving their large fortunes unclaimed by any heirs.
 When Sophia Smith was middle aged she found herself "the last leaf on the tree," in possession of over $200,000. She was a woman of simple, frugal almost New England tastes and the responsibility of disposing of so much money actually brought her mental distress. She actually had tears in her eyes when she went to her pastor, the Rev. J. M. Green, and begged him to help her in her difficulty. This was a responsibility that few men would like to assume, the disposal of another's fortune, and Mr. Green was at first unwilling to take it. Finally, however, he divided it up among the following interests: The American Bible Society, to the American Tract Society and the American Home Missionary Society. The foundation of this new college for women was but $80,000, a sum large for those days, but not enormous in comparison with the later benefactions to that college. To most women the task of spending $200,000 might not have seemed a difficult matter but because Miss Smith looked upon this responsibility as great and serious her name is now held in honor by between 5,000 and 6,000 women, who have been graduated from Smith College.

DAILY HOROSCOPE.

"The stars incline, but do not compel."
THURSDAY, AUGUST 27, 1914.
 Astrology reads this as rather an unfortunate day, for early in the morning Saturn and Mars are adverse. In the evening Neptune exercises a benefic influence.
 It is not wise, if one believes in the messages from the stars, to tempt fate under this aspect, for unusual perils may be met on journeys and in the routine walks of life. When Mars is unfriendly accidents are supposed to be common.
 While the aspect is in operation it is well to be temperate in all the appetites and emotions. The mental and physical force should be exercised equally.
 The argury is not good for those who must submit to surgery or dental operations. Postponement is believed to be wise when this aspect prevails.
 The government is not a lucky one for athletes. Baseball players find conditions more difficult than usual.
 Epidemics are foreshadowed. The stars indicate a prevalence of fevers and outbreaks of plague, which will be fought successfully.
 Early next month several railway accidents will take place, the seers prophesy, one of these will cause great loss of life.
 There is a prophecy that a murder trial, which will attract national attention, will uncover political conditions that will shock the public.
 Hospitals and philanthropic institutions will receive many bequests and there will be new ventures in safeguarding the health.
 It is prophesied that a foreign play will arouse widespread religious controversy. Fame for an actress not known in this country is prognosticated.
 The death of a woman of international fame again is foreshadowed. It will have an effect on certain large organizations in the United States, a London astrologer predicts.
 Persons whose birthdays it is probably will meet with provocation to quarrel or enter into litigation, but they should avoid litigation as they will lose in law suits. Young persons may give them anxiety.
 Children born on this day may be unusually brilliant, but they should be trained carefully for they have a tendency to be untruthful. There is little chance of money, except by means of hard work.

WESTERN DRAMA AT MID-CITY.

"Man and His Brother," a Victor two-reel drama, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan and Vera Sison, will be shown at the Mid-City today. The scenes are taken in the West and offer a fine background for the unfolding of the story. The cast consists of J. Warren Kerrigan as The Man; George Periolat as John Hess, a wealthy cattleman; and Vera Sison as Eleanor, Hess' daughter. The story runs: Under the stress of certain circumstances which will be explained in this story, Jack Edmond is a vagabond, tramping his way through the cattle country, looking for work. He is followed by a shepherd dog which belongs to Eleanor, the daughter of John Hess, he gains her friendship and she secures him a position on her father's ranch.
 Ned Emmet, sheriff, sees Jack at work and recognizes him. He hastens to inform John Hess that Jack is an ex-convict. Jack is discharged. Eleanor sees Jack leaving the ranch and asks him to explain. He tells her the truth, and she demands that he tell her all about it. Jack tells her the cause of his imprisonment, as follows:
 Jack and his brother "Wes" were very fond of each other, and they were both working on a ranch owned by George Hutton. Wes was in love with Hutton's wife, and was in the habit of meeting her in secret. Jack, of course, knew nothing of this. Mr. Hutton discovered the relationship between Wes and his wife and a quarrel followed. Wes gets away from the ranch house, and is followed to this bunk house by the angry Hutton. Jack, knowing nothing of what has happened, sees Hutton leveling his revolver at Wes and he (Jack) shoots Hutton down. Wes, not stopping to explain, makes an escape, and Jack is sent up for the crime. Later Mrs. Hutton, recovering from the prostrating shock of the whole affair, explains things and Jack is released from prison.
 Eleanor, having heard Jack's story, believes it, and makes him return with her to her father.

Ned comes at this time that Ned Emmet, the sheriff, has been killed by a dangerous outlaw, whom the sheriff has been trying to capture for some time. Jack is anxious to make good with Helen and her father, so he volunteers to go out and bring back the bad man or not return at all. He leaves and after several days of scouting, comes upon his man.
 Helen, being fond of hunting, has gone on a day's journey of her own into the mountains. She comes upon Jack and the bandit at the moment of capture. She remains in concealment and is ready to use her rifle if necessary. Jack knows nothing of her presence. A struggle takes place between the two men, but does not last long—there is a recognition between them. Jack discovers that the bandit is his brother, and Jack realizes that his errand is a failure, and with a promise from his brother that he will change his ways, he lets him go free.

Jack realizes that his hopes in regard to Eleanor and her father are dead ones, and he wearily turns in a different direction from that taken by his brother.

BIG FEATURE FILM COMING.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., by splendid judgment, has selected as its next release a picture entirely different and distinct from those that have gone before—"The Mystery of the Poison Pool," in which is featured the famous actor, James Gordon.
 This play is from the pen of James Dawley, who has written some of the greatest successes in moving picture-dom. The whole five reels fairly teem with daring and exciting scenes.
 Betty Harte, who has taken the leading roles with the "Famous Players," and who for years was star for the Selig and other prominent companies, takes the leading woman's part, and for beauty and fine acting cannot be surpassed.
 "The Mystery of the Poison Pool" is acknowledged by all the critics who have seen it as the best American five-reel production they have ever seen. It will come to Washington shortly after its release.
