

TERRIFIC PUNISHMENT SUFFERED BY EMDEN BEFORE SHE WAS FINALLY DRIVEN ASHORE

THE EMDEN AFTER THE BATTLE. PHOTO © 1914 BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION

This picture, the first to reach America, shows what happened to the German sea raider, the famous Emden. The cruiser, whose exploits in destroying commerce ships of the allies made her career most spectacular, was cornered by the Australian cruiser Sydney in the Indian Ocean and defeated. She was so badly battered that she was driven ashore and her crew, under the heroic Capt. Muller, had no choice but to surrender. This picture was taken from a launch. It can be easily seen that she suffered terrible punishment before she was forced to give up.

The articles in the kits, as they go to relieve the men in the trenches, carry with them a flavor of good deeds already done at home, for the making of them gave employment to the girls of Miss Anne Morgan's Vacation War Relief Committee. The accompanying picture shows Miss Morgan, daughter of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, and Mrs. Astor packing a kit at the headquarters.

HERE'S A REAL "GERMAN FAKE," AND IT FOOLED THE ALLIES VERY NEATLY

FAKE GERMAN GUN TO FOOLED ALLIES

German soldiers are good strategists. This picture shows one way they fool the enemy. It is a fake cannon, made of an old cart and a big barrel. From the air or from a distance on land the fake looks like a real 42-centimeter gun. The purpose of it is to draw artillery fire and to ast air men on the wrong track.
