

"SUB" SINKS AN ITALIAN CRUISER

Amalfi Torpedoed by Austrian Under-water Boat in Adriatic.

MOST OF CREW RESCUED

Men Cheer for King Before Big Battleship Goes Beneath Waves.

Rome, July 8.—The Italian armored cruiser Amalfi was torpedoed and sunk by an Austrian submarine while taking part in a reconnaissance in the Upper Adriatic. It was officially announced last night by the ministry of marine. Most members of the crew were saved.

The text of the statement follows: A reconnaissance in force was accomplished last night (July 6) in the Upper Adriatic. The Amalfi, which took part in the reconnaissance, was torpedoed at dawn this morning by an Austrian submarine and soon listed heavily to port.

The commander, before giving orders to the crew to jump overboard, cried, "Long live the King, long live Italy!" The entire crew, drawn up along the stern, echoed the shout, giving a remarkable exhibition of courage and discipline.

The commander, who was the last to leave, slipped overboard shortly after the Amalfi sank. Nearly all the officers and crew were saved.

The Amalfi, completed in 1906, had a displacement of 3,838 tons and was 437 feet long. Her complement in times of peace was 681.

Pola, the Austrian naval stronghold, is situated in the Upper Adriatic, at the extremity of the Istria peninsula, about 37½ miles southeast of Trieste. It is probable the reconnaissance referred to in the Italian statement was in this section of the Adriatic.

Repulse Many Attacks.

The official statement issued last night at the headquarters of the Italian general staff follows: An attack against our position at Passo di Campo in the Val d'Aone was repulsed with heavy loss.

This statement is the text for the following computation from official sources, giving the latest estimates of the total casualties of all powers engaged in the great war:

OFFICIAL WAR STATEMENTS.

Paris, July 8.—In Belgium a German attack upon the trenches captured by the British troops on July 6 southwest of Pihen was caught under the fire of the English artillery and of our field guns and was dispersed with very heavy losses.

Between Angres and Souchez the Germans about 6 o'clock this morning again attacked our position north of the Bechune-Arras road. They were repulsed.

North of the Souchez station they tried by a very violent counter-attack to retake the trenches which we captured last evening. They only succeeded in occupying about a hundred meters in the total front of 800 meters which we had taken from them.

The Queen-Beaune sector, there was fighting with hand grenades and aerial torpedoes. On the right bank of the Aisne in the region of Noyon, the fighting was continued with our advantage.

In Champagne before the small fort of Boussois we exploded a mine inflicting heavy damage on the German trenches.

Between the Meuse and the Moselle the day was marked by a violent bombardment at Li Tena-Vache, La Baux-Fery, in the forest of Apremont and also to the north of Filly.

The government press bureau gives out the following:

"It is officially announced in Petrograd that the submarine which made a successful attack on German warships on July 2, in the Baltic, was British."

An announcement by the Russian admiralty on July 4, said that a German pre-Dreadnought battleship of the Deutschland type had been blown up and sunk by two torpedoes from a Russian submarine. It was stated that the greater part of the battleship's complement of 800 officers and men were believed to have perished.

This is the first official announcement that British submarines have penetrated the Baltic.

Constantinople (via Amsterd.) July 8.—The Turkish war office makes the following announcement:

"On the Dardanelles-front our artillery bombarded enemy positions near Anadolou. When he returned to the sea, he was repulsed by our heavy guns. Attacks by reconnoitering divisions near Sedd ul Bahr were repulsed by us with heavy losses to the enemy."

GERMAN REPLY TO BE EVASIVE, IS BELIEF

to the date when he might expect it. According to these forecasts, Germany offers to refrain from torpedoing only such ships leaving American ports as the United States certifies to be unarmed.

The statement of the British government to hand aboard, and guarantees that they will stop for examination when signaled by submarines.

Information has come to this government that Germany will cite the case of the Armenian, on which about twenty-one American lives were lost, to show the difficulty with which she is confronted in attempting to "visit and search" suspected merchantmen, and will raise the point that the departure of the vessel from Newport News was in clear violation of the neutrality laws of the United States.

Germany is also expected to quote the statement of the British government to Ambassador Page, as communicated by the latter to the State Department, that the Armenian was an "admiralty bust," to show that she was actually in the service of Great Britain. Further, it will point out that the mules on the statement of the British army, were loaded under the direction of British army officers, and that the men engaged to care for them on the voyage over were employed by representatives of the British government.

In the opinion of the German government, all these circumstances prove that the Armenian was in reality a British government vessel, and as such she was not entitled to clearance papers.

Proposal Not Acceptable.

The opinion here is that this is essentially a proposal involving the abridgment or surrender of the American right to maintain by Freighting Wilson that citizens of the government may travel anywhere they please on unarmored merchantmen. On this ground alone, it is declared, it is not likely that the government could be in any way a party to such an arrangement.

THAW TURNS SHAFTS OF STATE'S ATTORNEY completely around the room, he finally centered his gaze upon Cook, smiled, and braced himself for the ordeal.

Cook carried him laboriously through the door into the office. Cook asked, in a low voice, "This little girl is my guest. My name is Jerome. She is my daughter."

"Then she told me," continued Thaw, who was speaking in a low voice, and with great deliberation, "that White invited her to visit him in his place on Twenty-fourth street. She went, and for the first time, she told me, he acted in a manner that she did not like. Always before that he had been kind to her. He had never given her expensive presents, she said, and had acted as a father might act. When she objected to his new manner, he spoke soothingly to her and told her not to mind."

"Two or three days later he had come down again from his place, expected to attend a lunch party, but she found White alone. She wanted to go away, but he detained her and asked her to wait and have a little champagne."

Thaw paused a full minute. Every eye in the courtroom was fixed upon him. As if awaking from nap, he glanced up suddenly, and then in a half whisper he finished.

"The next she knew it was all over with."

"The reason she told me about it," he explained, continuing a little later, "was that I asked her to marry me, but she said it wouldn't be right for her to do that."

Cook carried him through his trips to Europe with Evelyn before their marriage. He insisted that he had always been careful not to travel as man and wife and to protect her name in every way. They called into conference with them Miss Elizabeth Marlbury, and Thaw went to Pittsburgh for a while.

"When I got back," he said, "I decided there was no chance of rehabilitating her. She had gone to several parties with White."

Then Cook began to pound at the story Evelyn told Thaw. Thaw denied flatly the charge made by Mrs. Merrill.

"Of course, you know perfectly well I never had a room at Mrs. Merrill's house," he said. He admitted he received mail there under the name of Steele.

"Weren't Mrs. Merrill's charges against you true?"

"Thaw's eyes flashed angrily. 'You're afraid to say you believe those stories while I am here,' he cried.

The examination passed on to Mrs. Merrill about the 23 girls Hartridge said she had kept out of court for Thaw.

"Even to tell the substance would give the whole thing away," said Thaw, and he was permitted to retain his secret. He denied that he ever whipped boys or girls, but admitted that he once maintained a flat in Fifth avenue, and on one occasion had invited Ethel Thomas to visit him.

Mr. Cook said that he had never had a room at Mrs. Merrill's house, but that he had received mail there under the name of Steele.

Thaw turned to Justice Hendrick. He showed some signs of nervousness.

"Your honor," he said, "Mr. Cook is a fine man, but—"

A thrill went over the courtroom. A break in the examination, it appeared.

Thaw began to ask Cook to sit down. He was smiling and gesticulating and explaining that he heard from a deputy sheriff that Cook was not entirely well and he hoped Cook therefore would not stand. Stanchfield, who stood watch over his client throughout the day like a mother guardian, lifted his voice suddenly and cried:

"Just answer the question, Mr. Thaw."

"Thaw looked closely at his counsel and again came back to form.

"I meant that I couldn't answer it for a couple of hours," he said smilingly and the danger, if any had existed, was past. It subsequently was learned that Cook had not been well and had remarked it to the deputy sheriff in charge of Thaw.

Passes on Allegations.

The witness was next taken through all the details of the publicity campaign in his behalf, conducted by the late Alfred Henry Lewis, and to illustrate the character of work done by Lewis, Thaw produced a newspaper which had been got out in New Hampshire and circulated throughout the United States.

"There are a few things in this which might interest your alienists," he said facetiously. He was now running true to form again and beginning to develop a likable quality for the cross-examination.

"What alienists have you here," asked Thaw, countering on a question Cook asked him to give the names of Drs. Flint, McDonald and Ferris should be here," said Thaw. "I had a talk with them on a matter regarding my conduct there. It was a most foolish thing one could think of in an alienist. I should have said that."

He also told of having given seven years of study to insanity. At the end of an hour and a half, cook took a recess of two minutes. Thaw returned to the stand at the end of the recess greatly refreshed apparently. Cook then turned to Thaw's stay in Canada.

"When did you go to Canada," he asked. "Did you send for any newspaper men to give out an interview?"

"Many newspapers sent for me to give them an interview."

Cook next turned to Thaw's childhood. "Did you ever drive a horse to death?"

"I most certainly never did."

Gave Evelyn $50.

Cook next took him through his school life. Coming down to his career at Harvard, he denied emphatically the testimony of Frank K. Schriber and James O. Childs regarding incidents at Cambridge.

"I want to say," said he, "that I would rather be here than in the position of those two men. Their story was absolutely false and I don't think much of any man who would come here and tell a story like that. They were twenty-four years of age when they were in Cambridge. Thaw told of sending flowers and $50 to Evelyn, and her protest.

"I thought I was a good girl, she might be the money," said Thaw. Later he called on Evelyn and her mother.

"I visited her half a dozen times," he said, "but she didn't seem to be interested in me and I drifted away."

They next met in the spring of 1902. Stanford White was paying attention to her at the same time, and Thaw admitted he knew that White paid for an operation for appendicitis performed on Evelyn and was also paying for her education. In clear and lucid terms, he carried his narrative down to the time when he and Evelyn were in Paris in May of 1903 when Evelyn told him the story which is the alleged later drove him crazy. This is the story told by Evelyn herself at the two murder trials. Cook demanded it again today from Thaw.

Old Story R-told.

He was nervously fingering a handkerchief at the time, and was manifestly averse to retelling the story. At the end, Cook insisting, he shrugged his shoulders and began.

"I can't give you the full details at this late date," he began.

The crowd in the courtroom bent forward to hear the details of the old story. The jurors looked on intently. Thaw's face was grave. He searched the cutting for the appropriate word with which to begin, and when he did get under way, it was with simple, straightforward sentences that he told once more the story upon which the entire trial is founded. It was a most impressive scene.

"She told me of her stage life," he said. "She said she had met Edna Goodrich, who invited her to see Stanford White. He was a liberal man, she was told, and always willing to help girls who were poor. This was the first time she had met him. She had heard her mother say that he was a great actor."
