WYOMING LAWS PROTECT WOMAN

First State Giving Suffrage Is Cited as Instance of Excellent Statutes.

RIGHTS VALUED THERE

Miss Perry Compares These to North Carolina and Georgia, Where Similar Privileges Aren't Afforded.

By EMILY K. PERRY.

Press Chairman, Congressional Union.

Since woman suffrage has become an actual fact in twelve States out of forty-eight, one-fourth of the number in the entire Union, it may be of general interest to note the order of their coming into the ranks and to have parallel to these dates legislation on their statute books enacted shortly after suffrage was granted.

In giving data of the laws written on the statute books of suffrage States shortly after the women of those States became voters, we are making no assertions as to the lack of such laws in non-suffrage States. These laws might or might not have been enacted had the women remained unenfranchised.

What Wyoming Offers.

We are quoting statistics from an article reprinted from the New York Evening Post of November 1, 1914, by Elinor Byrns and Helen Ranlett, who obtained these statistics for the National American Woman Suffrage Association, New York City.

Wyoming was the first State to give the suffrage to its women in 1890. On the statute books of that State passed since that year are the following laws for the protection of women: Equal pay for equal work in public schools; seats required in all places of work; contract exempting employer from liability void; married women's property act; dower; and courtesy abolished; surviving husband or wife receives one-half, if children three-quarters, if no children, one-half, if all no children and estate under $1000.

Married woman must join in sale of homestead; married woman may contract, sue or be sued, carry on business and make will; surviving mother allowed guardianship of children, though she be remarried; desertion of wife without provision for her support a felony; age of consent raised to 18; married woman has right of separate estate; man, adulterer, man adjudged insane, manslaulter, free kindergartens established; physiology and hygiene taught in public places with reference to alcohol and narcotics; selling liquor, tobacco or deadly weapons to minors forbidden; exhibition and hypnotizing of children forbidden; unlawful to endanger life or health of child.

Contrasted with Southern Rights.

The general laws enacted for general welfare are white slave law; keeping a disorderly house or knowingly leasing for that purpose; illegal sale of liquor; birth and deaths required; competent witness necessary for securing marriage license; county and State boards of health established; practice of medicine, gambling devices must be seized and destroyed after any complaint made under oath; extortion on small loans made misdemeanor.

Wyoming is the only State where suffrage ranks in the early days after the civil war, might be said to have passed laws merely in step with civilization and with the progress of men and women under better conditions generally. This is of course in a large measure true, although we might very carefully compare the laws above stated on the Wyoming statute books with laws in some of the States which are not suffrage States.

In Georgia there is little protection for working girls or women beyond the lynching of a man for murder committed and the consent of a girl is ten years. We might also compare that to North Carolina; where far from making desertion illegal, a woman must prove that she has been deserted by her husband and must not have seen or spoken to her husband during that time before she is able to obtain a divorce.

Next Sunday we shall, if the courtesy of The Herald permits, publish parallel accounts of laws enacted in Colorado, the second State to give enfranchisement to its women.

A CORNER IN ANCESTORS

THE MORTON FAMILY.

By FRANCES COWLES.

George Morton, Pilgrim Father—The Descend of Levi P. Morton. How the Osborn Coat-of-Arms is Blazoned—Brief Sketch of the Roosevelts—The Southern Phillips Family.

The English Mortons were very strong and influential Roman Catholics. In fact, the Cardinal John Morton, who was chancellor of King Henry VIII, and in whose house Sir Thomas More began his career as a page, was a scion of this family for some reason unknown to us. George, who founded the family in America, was a Puritan of the staunch sort. George Morton lived in Austerfield, Yorkshire, the home of Gov. Bradford, and in 1623 he was a member of the party of Pilgrim Fathers, who found shelter in Leyden, Holland. The first documentary record of this George is the record of his marriage, which took place in Holland in the summer of 1612. It runs thus: "George Morton, merchant, from York, in England, accompanied by Thomas Morton, his brother, and Roger Wilson, his acquaintance, with Juliana Carpenter, maid from Bath, in England, accompanied by Alexander Carpenter, her father, and Alice Carpenter, her sister, and Anne Robinson, her acquaintance."

In the latter part of July, 1623, Morton came to this country on board the ship Anne, William Pierce, master. He was one of the founders of the colony of Plymouth. His wife survived him and married Manasseh Kempton.

George Morton's children, all of whom save the last were born in Leyden, were as follows: Nathaniel, Fatience, John Faunce, John, Sarah, and Ephraim, who was born in 1623, on the passage from Leyden, Holland, to America.

The descent of Levi P. Morton is traced through the second son, the Hon. John Morton, and his second wife, Mary Ring. His son, Capt. Ebenezer, born at Plymouth in 1686, married Mercy Foster and they had Ebenezer, who married Mrs.

Sarah Cobbs, whose son Levi-Livy, as it was spelled in the old documents—married Hannah Daily, and became the father of the Rev. Daniel Olin Morton. He married Lucretia Justin, and their son was Levi Parsons Morton, vice President in McKinley's first administration.

The name Morton is derived in all cases, as in the case of the Yorkshire Mortons, from the locality of the same name. As there are places called Morton in Derby, Lincoln, York, Warwick, Durham, Norfolk, Hereford and Northampton, there may be many different families who bear the name.

The arms of the Mortons are blazoned: Quarterly gules and ermine in the center a bend between two lions rampant sable. The crest is a lion's head guardant argent attired or. The crest is a goat's head argent attired or.

Answers to Correspondents.

To T. J. M., who asks whether the Osborn family has a coat-of-arms and, if so, how it is blazoned.

The arms of the Osborns are blazoned: Argent a bend between two lions rampant sable. The crest is a lion's head proper, ducally crowned or. The motto is: "Quantum in rebus inane."

This is the armorial bearing of the Osborns of Chicksand Priory, Sheffield, England, and of course, unless it can be proved by the American branch of Connecticut Osborns that the Richard who came to this country in 1634 in the ship Hopewell was the Richard, son of Thomas, son of Sir John Osborn, knight, there is no very good reason why the Connecticut Osborns should bear these arms. However, the evidence seems to be all in favor of such relationship.

To "One of the Long Island Roosevelts" who asks for a brief sketch of the family to which Col. Roosevelt belongs.

Roosevelt is a name derived from Roosevelt—a Dutch word meaning the field, or veldt of roses.

Another form of the name was Rosendahl, a valley of roses. As a family name, it is traced to Poland, where in the twelfth century it was assumed by a family who had a rose for armorial bearing, perhaps because they lived in a valley, or field of roses. They were called Rosendahl, or Van Roosevelt. Other variations are Rosawell, Rosenveldt, Rosvelt, Rosvelt, Rosvelt. The prefix Van, so common in early records, was dropped by the beginning of the eighteenth century.

The common ancestor was Klaus, or Claus Martensen Van Rosenveldt, of Holland, who arrived in New Netherlands, or New York, 1643, with his wife, Jannetje Samuëls-Thomas.

The coat-of-arms of President Roosevelt is argent, on a mount vert, a rosebush, with three roses in full bloom proper. Crest, three ostrich feathers, per pale, gules and argent.

Motto, "Qui Plantavit Curabit" (the one who planted it will take care of it).

To T. H. P., who asks whether there is a Southern family of Phillips and what is the origin of the surname.

Harriet Griffin and had a son, William, of Stafford County, Va., who was born in 1777. He was a colonel of the Tenth Regiment of Virginia. He married Elizabeth Fowke, niece of Gov. Dinwiddie, and their son, William Fowke Phillips, was auditor of the United States Treasury and Postoffice Department in the time of the civil war. The family is prominent in the South.

The name is derived from the first name Philip and is known in every European country in some similar form. The coat-of-arms is described: Argent a lion rampant sable ducally gorged, chained or. The crest is a lion as in the arms. The motto is, "Animus et Fides."

VON HINDENBURG GETS RUG.

People of Asia Minor Send Present to German Victor.

Special Cable to The Washington Herald.

Berlin, Sept. 11.—The fame of Field Marshal von Hindenburg has reached even the most remote parts of the Turkish empire. Recently a large box from Konia in Asia Minor arrived at the headquarters of the great army leader. The box contained a costly rug, a gift of the people of Konia.

The rug is a beautiful product of Turkish art and industry. It shows a detailed map of Eastern Prussia. In one corner is the portrait of Hindenburg in brilliant colors, surrounded by a wreath of oak leaves, and the other corners are ornamented with figures of German soldiers. The field in the middle contains the following inscription in Turkish and German:

To his excellency Field Marshal Paul von Beneckendorff and von Hindenburg, the victor of the Masurian Lakes, this rug is gratefully dedicated by the inhabitants of Konia, Asia Minor.

Pratt Gives No Confirmation.

Dr. O. C. Pratt, chief of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, Department of Commerce, who returned from New York yesterday, where he has been conferring with Dr. Thomas H. Norton, the government expert on dyes, would give no confirmation of the story that inventors have discovered new processes for successfully making coal tar dyes and for extracting potash from field spar.

Dutch Fire on German Airship.

Amsterdam, Sept. 11.—A dispatch to the Maasbode from Roosendam says that Dutch frontier guards fired on a Zeppelin attempting to pass over Holland last night. The German airship was forced to turn back and proceeded toward the south.

In October, 1890, an American citizen, Joseph Janssen, of New York, was arrested in Berlin for wickedly, feloniously and treasonably avowing a willingness to sneeze at the German Emperor.
