Ballet Russe Remarkable Symposium of Many Arts.

Serge de Diaghileff Owe His Unparalleled Triumph to Perfect Harmony of His Infusion of Modern Thought into Depiction of Barbaric Splendor Through His Blending of Dancing, Choreography, Flashing Pageantry, Pulsating Music, Vivid Scenery and Mimetic Art.

By JULIA CHANDLER.

The Serge de Diaghileff Ballet Russe, under the local management of T. Arthur Smith, closed its Washington engagement at the New National Theater last evening with a program which included Cleopatra, L'Après Midi d'un Faune, and Carnaval, three of the ballets offered in the bills of Thursday and Friday, with the addition of La Princesse Enchantée as the new entertainment.

La Princesse Enchantée is a classic arrangement by Petipa, maestro de ballet of Russia, to the music of Tchaikowsky with costumes and decorations by the impressionistic Bakst. It is a Pas de Deux which requires great technical skill on the part of Lydia Lopokova and Adolph Bolm who add to the splendid impression they have created by the flawlessness of their technique and their fascination of pantomime.

The three performances given by the Ballet Russe at the National Theater, which ended last evening in a furor of applause and added triumph for the famous mimes and dancers, afforded Washington the opportunity of witnessing nine ballets representative of the diversified themes interpreted by the Diaghileff troupe. Now that the engagement is closed we are still obsessed with the exotic beauty, the spectacular splendor, the blaze of color, the stirring music, the fascinating pageantry, the marvelous art of the dancers particularly in their ensembles, and the breadth of the Diaghileff conception which has brought us the barbaric splendors of the Orient of a yesterday in harmony with modern thought.

So perfect a thing is the Diaghileff fusion of arts that it would be a difficult matter for even a skilled analyst to lay finger upon any one feature more than another which accounts for the quickness of the public pulse by the Ballet Russe.

Some there are who would insist that the chief charm of the performance background; the costumes and decorations born of the wonderful imagination of Leon Bakst in bold yet harmonious combinations of color. To others the prime factor of appeal might be the mimetic power of the artists; interpreting the fantasies, legends, fairy actions; the exquisitely mimed dream poem of the ballet, the sylvan story of the Faune, or that lurid chapter from the Arabian Nights. To others the stirring strains of Stravinsky under the mastery direction of M. Ernest Ansermet, or the choreography of Michel Fokine might be the potent factor of appeal, while still others would carry from the theater as their most vivid and satisfying memory the brilliant dancing of Lopokova; the impassioned movements of Graydlov; the fascinating accomplishment of Masine; the tremendous dramatic power of the sylvan story of Flora Revalles; or the skill and agility of Lubov Tchernieva, who, unaided by coryphées, mimed and danced their way to tempests of appreciative applause.

But, despite what may or may not be the one greatest factor in the unparalleled achievement of the Ballet Russe it is undisputed that Mr. de Diaghileff has won his triumph in the perfect harmony with which he has blended many arts.

His ballet has been to us a revelation in the fascination of the dance; the dramatic power of mimetic art; vivid pageantry; novel and striking color effects in costumes and decorations; sweeping, pulsating music; marvelous choreography, accomplished through a symposium of art and artists the like of which the Russian nobleman might challenge the world to produce without the slightest fear for himself or his laurels.

IDEAL MOTOR IS DANIELS' DREAM

Secretary Tells Naval Engineers That World's Great Need Is Perfect Engine.

Navy Head Urges Appropriation for Research Laboratory—Phelan Promises Support.

The great need of the world, in the opinion of Secretary of the Navy Daniels, is a perfect submarine engine and a perfect airplane engine. This opinion he gave last night to the American Society of Naval Engineers at their annual banquet in the Army and Navy Club.

"Such engines are not in the United States nor in Europe," he told his audience some months ago. "As yet your country work to meet that need."

Secretary Daniels, although "not wishing to be a prophet," declared the cost of such engines would be appropriate not less than $500,000,000 for the enlargement of the navy.

"When Congress gives the authority to construct the ships in five years' time, the question then is whether the ships will be built on old plans and with each new Congress having plans, or whether they will be built on a consistent program."

Urges Research Laboratory.

"We should put some of that money in a research laboratory, so that every dollar will be spent wisely. There is no doubt that with this laboratory, we will get more dollars' worth of equipment than we ever had before or will have since."

The Secretary lauded the engineers' society and the Naval Advisory Board and the quickness of the latter in organizing the organizations give the power, Congress may vote millions and build dreadnoughts of a size unknown, and they would be worthless."

Promises of support of the Secretary's naval program were given by Senator Phelan and Congressman Roberts. Senator Phelan, in responding to the toast, "The Navy and Congress," said:

"The House and Senate are in session for preparing this country against the possible contingency of war. The people want Congress to prepare the country to meet any contingency."

FALL REPLIES TO PRESIDENT

Says Trouble Is Wilson Has Not Given Publicity to Reports.

DEFENDS BORDER PEOPLE

Declares Executive's utterances on Western Tour Might Have Caused War with European Power.

El Paso, Tex., March 25.—Senator A. B. Vail of New Mexico, tonight issued a vigorous reply to President Wilson's charge that a conspiracy exists along the border to bring about intervention and to misrepresent conditions. He said:

"It is the President's duty to the people of the United States to make known the names of these traitors who are guilty of publicizing rumors for the purpose of bringing about war."

"I think also the President should have been forced to give his opinion on his recent tour to give facts to the people instead of uttering hysterical and mysterious statements about the immediate prospect of war for political gain."

"The statements he did make would have, in my judgment, resulted in the severance of relations with one of the great European powers if it had not been for the much-discussed McLemore resolution. The agitation caused by this resolution in Congress prevented a war, which the President, in my judgment, was ready to wage for political gain."

"As to his Mexican statement, he is evidently obtaining his information from the same class he stamped as 'all liars' in his New York speech. If in that speech he had excluded Duvall West, of San Antonio, his special representative, and Cardinal Gibbons, I would have agreed with him."

LECTURES ON SHAKESPEARE

Chauncey C. Williams Tells University Club of Bard's Home.

P. T. Barnum, of circus fame, saved the birthplace of William Shakespeare to the English people by offering to buy it for transportation to America, last night declared Chauncey C. Williams in a lecture at the University Club. Before Barnum's visit to England, during which he made his offer, the historic home was being permitted to run into decay, but the offer served to wake the English people up, Mr. Williams said.

Mr. Williams' lecture, given before several scores of members of the club and their friends, was illustrated with stereoscopic slides. He gave intimate details of Shakespeare's life and described in detail his birth town.

BOY, 18, PLEADS UNWRITTEN LAW

Youth Slew Mother's Admirer with Ax, He Declares.

CALMLY TELLS ABOUT IT

Watched Man Until He Went to Sleep, Then Pulled Back Covers and Struck Fatal Blow.

Special to The Washington Herald.

New York, March 25.—Calmyly puffing at a cigarette while his finger prints were being taken at Police Headquarters today, Emil Green, 18 years old, confessed to detectives and newspaper men just how he killed Henry Thayer, a subway guard, in the home of his mother, Mrs. Hattie Green, at 1732 Victor street.

"He got what was coming to him," said Green, between puffs of his cigarette. "The unwritten law is good enough for me."

Young Green did not show the least sign of emotion as he described minutely how he killed Thayer with an ax while the subway guard lay asleep. From his manner he might have been describing a ball game or some other sport.

He told how Thayer was introduced in his home by his sister, Annie. At that time he said Thayer was a soldier at Fort Slocum, and he got tired of having him around and blew it west on West on a freight train and stayed out in that country for quite a while. Last June I came home and found this guy still hanging around the house.

"My brother Frank and I got sick of it and gave him a good trimming one day. They did not get it, but they were told to get it. I got tired of having him around and blew it west on West on a freight train and stayed out in that country for quite a while. Last June I came home and found this guy still hanging around the house."

"Thayer began to talk about by sister Anna and I was not going to stand for that. He had pictures of himself all over the house and I got rid of them, but he had some more taken. Things reached the limit and I made up my mind to have it over with."

"Yesterday morning I got an ax and sharpened it. After it was sharpened I hid it away. Thayer always came home about 1:30 in the afternoon and generally went to a saloon near the house."

Young Green said he waited near the saloon for Thayer and the subway guard snay came along and bought him a glass of beer. Then they went to the house together.

"Dinner was waiting for him on the stove but this big houn did not like the coffee and gave me 15 cents to get him a pint. I got that for him and we drank it together. He went to bed and I went upstairs and got the ax. I went to his room and always slept with his head under
