THE DAILY ADVENTURES OF PUSS IN BOOTS, JR.

BEDTIME STORY.

The Journey Over Sherwood Forest.

When Puss Junior awoke the next morning he looked out the window of his room in the potter's house. It was a "misty, moisy morning," sure enough. The water was dripping from the eaves, and the many earthen pots which the potter had on his little yard were full of rain water. In the distance Sherwood Forest stood wet and dreary.

Evidently enjoying wetting his feet.

him waddling about in a pool of water, evidently enjoying wetting his feet. Every now and then he would flap his wings and give a great hiss. "What do I care for a little rain? It washes off each dirty stain. It makes my feathers clean and sleek. So I can curl them with my beak!" "Very fine," cried Mother Goose, who was standing behind Puss, unnoticed, for the potter's wife and some into the kitchen to prepare the breakfast. "I never knew he could make up poetry on the spur of the moment!" "He's a pretty wise old Gander," replied Puss Junior. "He doesn't say much, but I know he thinks a lot."

HOROSCOPE

"The stars incline, but do not compel."

Tuesday, July 11, 1916.

This is not an important day in planetary direction, but the influences are favorable rather than otherwise. Mars and Neptune both rule strongly for good.

The sway is good for medicine, pharmacy, surgery, assaying, and mechanical work.

It is a lucky time for beginning building or business with carpenters, lumbermen, and structural iron workers. Men in all the foregoing activities have the forecast of great gain in the next year.

The aspect is believed to be especially good for persons born under Scorpio between October 23 and November 21. Success through resourcefulness and enterprise is believed to be promoted.

There is an encouraging sign for soliciting and canvassing. This should be a lucky day for raising funds for any big project.

Journeys on the water are favorably directed under this configuration. The sway is a kindly one for those who seek poetic inspiration or psychic development.

The Moon is in a sign held to promise understanding and co-operation. It is particularly good for thoughtful persons.

Sensations in which railways have the central interest are foretold. Honor for a former President of the United States is prognosticated. This will come to him before snowfall, the seers declare.

Schisms in women's organizations of all sorts may be imminent during the summer months, but astrologers declare that the stars and not the women are to blame for lack of harmony.

The loss of a great fortune is pre-announced by the stars. This may be due to a fire or destruction of property which starts general disaster.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the augury of a year of hard work that may be unsuccessful. Those who work for salaries should be careful.

EXPERIMENT WITH RECIPES.

Some good cooks cook without written recipes. Indeed, they cook largely by guesswork—by "instinct"—for they don't read and they don't write recipes in their minds. They make cake with a little sugar crumbed with enough butter, with some milk added, and enough flour, baking powder, salt and flavoring, to make the right mixture. How they do it is beyond the ken of the cook who depends on recipes, written definitely.

Supposing that you are one of those who follow recipes. Even so, you should never be content until you have experimented with the various recipes. You can give delightful variety to the dishes you prepare if you vary them in preparation. And more than that, you can utilize whatever you have on hand in the way of supplies. Besides, you will gain confidence and interest in cooking if you follow the recipe-tampering idea.

For instance, take a recipe for plain layer cake. You can, some day, add half a cupful of cocoa to it, sifted with the sugar and flour, to make a chocolate cake. Bake it in a flat, square sheet, frost it with white icing, and the result will be delicious. Another day, add spices to taste, with raisins and currants, and take the mixture in tiny-cake tins. Still again, add chopped nut meats and citron and bake in a shallow loaf.

And with a good muffin recipe, add cold cooked cereal, any that is on hand, to the mixture to give variety. Or use half Graham or whole wheat flour to give variety.

With soup, use whatever is on hand. If you have a recipe for soup calling for carrots, and no carrots are on hand, use tomatoes. Or substitute green peppers for celery. Change and vary, and you will soon learn what variations and changes are good to make.

Spices, too, can be interchanged. Sometimes use cinnamon in a pudding calling for nutmeg, and use nutmeg on cinnamon bread—and change the name, of course, to fit the spice.

All these variations, and many more that will suggest themselves, will enlarge your cooking knowledge and will give greater variety, which is to be desired, in the dishes you set forth.

ONCE when I was a little girl and was very unhappy because I was relegated to the background and kept there while the grown-ups enjoyed themselves, I decided that in order to attract attention I must do something unusual.

Long I pondered as to whether it would be better for me to be suddenly taken very ill, to have a terrible tantrum or to be so good and quiet they would all notice it and feel very sorry for me. I decided upon the latter course by way of being original, and so long and so still did I sit there in one pose, gazing sadly ahead of me, that one by one they left their comfortable chairs to come over and sympathize in a most solicitous manner.

But the old character man of the company studied me with twinkling eyes, nor was he deceived a minute. "This reminds me of a story I once heard about Minnie Maddern Fiske," he began, "when she was a little girl about Mary's age. Even when a child she was always a dominant spirit, who commanded and demanded attention. It was she whose guiding hand ruled the other children of the neighborhood—it was she who was always the interesting and active center of attraction."

"But one day some new kiddies moved into the neighborhood and in the excitement the lights of this scintillating little girl were dimmed. For a long, long time she sat in the corner with her face buried in her hands and stared with her glistening eyes at the group of laughing, noisy children who gathered around the new neighbors, and she wondered what she could possibly do that would suddenly center all the interest upon herself."

"The mother of the new little girls, eager to make her children popular with the neighbors' children, came out and joined the group, offering as a great promotion of friendship to take them to the candy shop around the corner and buy ice cream for all."

"It was a sultry day—the regular ice-cream days of summer—and little Minnie Maddern followed them unhappily to the store. All were noisy and clamoring for their particular kind of cream, with the exception of little Miss Maddern, who looked indifferent and unconcerned. 'What will you have,' they asked her eagerly, and her eyes grew as round as saucers as she glanced slowly across the room to the counter where the great freezers were disgorging their contents. How good it looked, so coolly pink and white!

"But she drew her lips down into a little, thin line and replied logically, 'I don't care for ice cream—thank you.'"

"No ice cream?" came the astonished echo—while she gazed at them triumphantly. "No ice cream!" She was resolute. Not even when the spoons clinked in the dishes and the tears stood in her eyes because the desire for ice cream was strong upon her would she falter in her purpose to sit there alone, the stuff martyrs are made of, but the center of consolation and attraction."

Nor has Minnie Maddern Fiske ever resigned her position as center
