

SUES ON PROMISE OF HIS SISTER, NOW DEAD

Milton Greene Files Action Against Executor of Estate.

Milton Greene yesterday filed in the District Supreme Court a suit against Milton C. Work, executor of the estate of his sister, Ethel Carbaugh, for $25,000 of this amount, $25,000 the plaintiff alleges, is due him under an agreement he had with his sister at the time they received their share of the estate of their mother.

This agreement, it is said, required that they each deposit $25,000 with the American Security and Trust Company, the $50,000, upon the demise of either, go to the other. Greene claims he deposited the money according to the agreement, but that following the death of his sister he learned that her share of the money had never been deposited and that she failed to leave it to him by her will, which he claims was another part of the agreement.

Mrs. Carbaugh was the wife of the late Col. Carbaugh. She died in Lucern, Switzerland, about a year ago. The plaintiff is represented by Attorneys Lucas P. Lovins, L. L. Hamner, and Wharton E. Lester.

BANDAGES MAKE GIRL TORCH.

Turpentine on Finger Wrappings Catches Fire.

Mr. Carmel, Pa., Sept. 29.—Mary Marhenock, of Marion Heights, became a human torch when in lighting an oil lamp she ignited turpentine-soaked bandages wrapped about her fingers, which were sore. Pedestrians seeing the flames turned in an alarm and the fire department responded. The girl was seriously burned.

Itching and Burning So Severe Unable to Do Work. Lost Much Rest At Night. Entirely

HEALED BY CUTICURA SOAP AND OINTMENT

"My husband suffered with ringworm on his hand. At first it was a very small place, but it kept spreading in a circle until it almost covered his entire hand. His hand was red, sore, and inflamed and very much swollen, and the itching and burning were so severe that he was unable to do a day's work. He lost much rest at night.

This trouble lasted for many months. I wrote for a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and afterwards bought more, and his hand was entirely healed." (Signed) Mrs. Allie Missick, Cleveland, Va., Mar. 16, 1916.

NEW YORK, DAY BY DAY

Special Correspondent of The Washington Herald. New York, Sept. 29.—Lillian Russell, with a rose blown complexion unimpaired, despite a year's residence in smoky Pittsburgh, has arrived in New York for the winter. She has been bowling around on Broadway and Fifth avenue in a jugged-out English car, which is pure white trimmed in gold stripes.

Her husband, A. F. Moore, who owns a Pittsburgh newspaper, is with her. At the Hotel Majestic, where they are stopping, Mr. Moore was smoking an afternoon cigar the other evening when a bellboy tugged at his sleeve very gently. He turned.

"Mr. Russell," said the lad, "someone wants to see you out front in an automobile."

"My name," said Mr. Moore, "is not Russell." And he turned on his heel and walked away. In the meantime the boy was paging a "Mr. Russell" all through the hotel. Finally it dawned on Mr. Moore that his wife was waiting for him in her car.

"There is about only one thing left for me to do," he said, "and that is to register as Mr. Lillian Russell when I come to New York."

All of which shows that editors have a sense of humor, something I have never known. In the meantime the boy who gave him a trick cigar. After he had decorated me with one of his choicest selections of tinware—a regular wash-bowl in fact—I went out of that office into the cruel world convinced that editors were the most lugubrious people in the world.

Broadway has a new drink. It goes by the name of the ideal cocktail, and was invented by a munition millionaire. When Roy K. Moulton, the humorist, was in town the other day, he dropped into the Knickerbocker bar with a friend. Everybody in the place was lapping up ideal cocktails, and watching the bar go around.

So far as Moulton could learn, the basis of the drink is gasoline, with a tigger of prussic acid and a heavy dash of dynamite. Those who had imbibed of it were only worth a million, but those who had quaffed two were worth two millions, and so on ad nauseum.

Over in the leather-lined cozy corner there was one man who had been drinking them all afternoon. He was deeply engrossed in reversing a scheme to two beggars who had only had two cocktails and were worth collectively four millions. The plan he had was to personally—damn it, we have split another one of those lunatics—we mean personally to pay the entire Belgian indemnity.

A stranger in New York was watching the police reserves disperse street-car strikers on the upper East Side the other day. He remarked on the hazardous nature of their calling, and how little the public appreciates "The Finest."

"They are heroes now," he said, "and perhaps tomorrow when a life is to be saved or a lawbreaker caught. They risk their lives and are expected to do it. But there are the higher-ups who devote most of their time to trying these same men on all sorts of charges—fining them, suspending them without pay, letting them go on probation, or perhaps dismissing them."

And the stranger was right. No doubt the police regulations are necessary, for there have been some nasty police scandals in New York, but it does seem strange that a man should be a hero today and a culprit tomorrow, but that is the common lot of the average New York policeman.

John V. Melton, aged 73, who says he is the oldest actor on Broadway, is seeking a new part for the coming season. He first appeared in New York in 1855, on Broome street, and he believes that the profession of acting is skidding, so he is going to jump in and show a lot of the young fellows up—that is, if he can get an engagement.

ALLIGATOR AND LESSON PRESENTED TO BURELSON

Postmaster General Burelson has just received a baby alligator from a Southern friend named Wigglesworth. The donor, in a letter, states that "alligators live at large in ponds, lakes, creeks and rivers, and live off fish, frogs and mud, and the larger ones catch pigs and hogs that go around where they are at, if they can."

He further states "If the youngster lives, which is now about eight inches long, in a few years he will make a large alligator about eleven feet or more."

The baby "ator quickly revived when placed in water. He has been turned over to the National Zoo, where he wiggles for all he's worth.
