

U.S. SHIP BOARD HAS NEW WEST COAST BRANCH

Yards on Pacific Seaboard Show Great Activity in War Work.

The increase in activity and production of the Pacific shipyards, it was announced last night at the United States Shipping Board, had reached such an important stage that a director of operations for the Board, with headquarters in San Francisco, had been appointed in the person of C. W. Cook, formerly of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Company.

It was announced also that the yards at Portland had made so much progress that a separate office, such as maintained in Seattle, Tacoma and other Pacific coast cities, is to be established there.

The Pacific coast yards seem to be making better time on the construction of fabricated steel ships so far, despite that much of their steel has to be transported around the continent by way of the Panama Canal.

The explanation of the Shipping Board is that there is a higher class of labor there, mostly American, which works faster and with more intelligence.

One Ship a Month. A telegram received by the Board yesterday afternoon reports the launching of the War General, a steel fabricated ship, in two days from laying the keel, and the same builders, J. F. Doothey & Co., of Seattle, expect to launch the War Fort the first week in January.

The explanation of the Shipping Board is that there is a higher class of labor there, mostly American, which works faster and with more intelligence.

It is held that the Board needs more than complete vessels of any kind at this time, and they are concentrating on hull construction, believing it a comparatively easy matter to get engines and boilers and install them at once as hulls are finished.
