“What Can She Do?”

One of the popular novels of thirty years ago bore the title, “What Can She Do?”

The great world war has brought the full answer to the question.

The answer is: “She” can do most of the work of the world!

“She” can carry on the work of the office—as she has been learning to do so capably for many years. The tasks of business, except perhaps those of the roughest sort, are as easy for her as for men.

“She” can take up the work left behind by the man who is now with the colors—thus carrying on the world’s essential tasks of industry and trade while he is fighting to make the world a decent and safe place in which to live.

There is no longer any prejudice against women workers. They are serving the nation magnificently.

What position can you offer to a woman in your office, in your store, in your factory?

Send your message through The Washington Herald Want Ad route.
