

RUSSIA SWEEP BY MYSTICISM

Religious Wave Threatens To Overthrow Rule of The Bolsheviki.

WOMAN'S DREAM START

"Queen of the World" Draws Multitude by Painting of Virgin Mary.

(Washington Herald-Public Ledger Service. Special Cable Dispatch.)

Geneva, June 13.—A wave of religious mysticism is sweeping over Russia...

Always deeply religious and prone to primitive superstitions the Russian people are passionately seeking oblivion of their miserable existence under Red tyranny...

The mystical revival which alarms the Red rulers even more than do the Polish victories has now reached an emotional climax...

The image of the Virgin of Woskresensk is a fifteenth century fresco painting on the wall of the chapel of the monastery of Woskresensk, near Moscow.

Founded on Woman's Dream.

It was discovered—so the story goes that it is implicitly believed throughout the length and breadth of Russia—by a peasant woman...

The peasant woman traveled many days before she reached the monastery but no image of the Virgin existed in the chapel.

"Miracles" Rouse Nation.

Since the thousands of pilgrims have come daily to worship at the shrine of Woskresensk and all Russia is ringing with reports of the miracles performed by "The Virgin Queen of the World"...

DON'T PITY THE CHAMBERMAID

Attention, you girls who are stenographers, bookkeepers, and clerks!

Do you think you're any more fortunate than a service girl in a large hotel...

Well, if you do, you are mistaken; at least in the opinion of Paula Mayer, 25, a little Swiss girl who came to this country three years ago.

Paula is employed on the top floor of a leading hotel in San Francisco and wouldn't trade places with 99 out of 100 American girls now working in offices.

"They think they're too good to be service girls," said Paula in her perfect English which she learned at night school.

"But if they only knew what it really is they'd think different. I like my work; it's easy, genteel and interesting. I receive $45 a month, a fine room in the hotel, all my meals and laundry. In fact, I live as well as the guests of the hotel.

"Often my tips average $100 a month, so that at the end of the month I have more than $125 saved. Are there any office girls who can do that well I think not.

"Independence! I have as much as anybody. I have my eight hours work to do and when it is finished I am free for the day. I am through work at 4 in the afternoon and never have to stay over and do extra work as your office girls do. My evenings I have for myself to meet friends, or to do as I wish.

"The American girls seem to think it is beneath them to do the work I am doing. Why? I am happier than they. I make much, much more money. I don't work any harder. I really can't understand it. Some of these girls trying to live on $60 a month should try it once. They wouldn't go back to their stuffy offices again."

COLBY EXTOLS NATION'S FLAG

Not Emblem of Selfishness, He Declares at Potomac Park Ceremony.

AIM ONWARD, UPWARD

Secretary of State's Address Features Annual Event Held by Elks.

Urging upon his hearers the true symbolism of the American flag as the banner of an unselfish nation with the ideals of American people enwrapped in its folds, Secretary of State Bainbridge Colby was the principal speaker at the annual Flag Day exercises of Washington, D. C., Lodge No. 15, B. P. O. Elks, held yesterday afternoon in the Sylvan Theater, Potomac Park.

Referring to the Republican national convention which has just closed, he said: "For a week, the attention of the country has been centered upon the struggle in Chicago of one of the great national parties to agree upon a candidate for the highest office of the land. We have followed the swaying fortunes of rival candidates. We have seen long pursued efforts culminate in the supreme exertion of the convention hour. The week has been marked by valiant attack and stout defense, by bitter recrimination, but, I am glad to add, by much good nature. There have been some allusions to country in the outgivings which have reached us from the convention city, but a great deal more has been said about party and party success.

"How right and proper—indeed, how fortunate—that Flag Day comes swift upon the heels of a period so given over to personal striving and selfish turmoil. We have heard the din of party and of faction and of men. Let us hearken to the deep, calm note of the nation's flag as it calls us upward from the level of party strife to the serene heights of duty and thoughts of country.

"These are times in which we should have the flag not only in our hearts, but in our minds and on our lips. The times call for great action, for high and disinterested action. We have problems at home which clamor for solution and which can be solved only in the spirit of the flag. We have duties abroad which are long postponed and which can be only discharged in the noble and generous spirit of the flag.

"It is a flag of glory. It is a flag which has moved forward on every field, never backward; and today, at this hour, it cannot be the emblem of a moral retreat upon that field of highest service, the rescue of a world in which our destiny as a nation calls us."

Power of Old Glory. Commissioner Louis Brownlow delivered a short address, in which he contrasted the national strength and power represented by the "Old Glory" of today with the more united for a common cause of the thirteen colonies symbolized by the original flag fashioned by Betsy Ross.

William S. Shelby, secretary of Washington Lodge, No. 15, B. P. O. E., who had been designated to write the annual eulogy, paid an eloquent tribute to the Stars and Stripes.

A striking feature of the impressive patriotic ritual of the Elks was the construction of a floral Liberty Bell—red roses for courage, white lilies for purity and charity, and violets for the blue in the flag, symbolic of justice, brotherly love and fidelity.

There are, however, other points concerning which opinion differs. In this connection the league points out the difficult problems of the composition of the court, of the competency of the court to deal with cases brought before it by only one contesting party and of the means of insuring execution of judgments given.

By different opinions as to whether the court should be one of justice or one of arbitration. Root and the American delegation are expected to support the former. Describing what the court of international justice should be, the league declares:

"The court should be accessible at all times; it must sit permanently. The conditions under which the court can be resorted to should be fixed in advance in its statutes. The court should administer the law pure and simple, regardless of political consequences. The jurists are virtually agreed upon the three points just mentioned, but

Root Again Boomed as Leader Of World Court at The Hague As League Prepares to Meet

(Washington Herald - Public Ledger Service. Special Cable Dispatch.)

London, June 13.—Next week the whole world will hear from the league of nations. Two important meetings are scheduled in London and The Hague for Monday and Wednesday respectively.

As a result of the conferences it is anticipated the foundations will be laid for a supreme court of the world; that peace will be made between Soviet Russia and Persia; that Dr. Friedtjof Nansen will receive additional support in his plans to repatriate half a million half-starved and ragged war prisoners from Russia and that an appeal will be addressed to every country in the world to contribute $100,000 to fight disease in Central Europe. It would not be surprising if the league council would definitely abandon its plans for a commission to investigate conditions in Bolshevik Russia.

Persian Appeal Up.

On Monday the supreme council in London will consider the appeal of the Persian government for action in the crisis in the Near East brought about by the Bolshevik invasion of northern Persia. On Wednesday, in the Peace Palace at The Hague, international jurists will formulate plans for the establishment of a permanent court of international justice. While the United States will not be represented at this first conference, America will, through Elihu Root, and his colleagues, take part in the discussions in Holland for establishing a world supreme court.

The council on Monday will listen to a statement of Persia's foreign minister and then take advantage of the presence in London of Gregory Kraasin, Bolshevik trade envoy, and attempt to bring about a favorable action by the Russian government upon his shoulders.

France Antagonistic.

It is understood he has been in wireless communication with his government regarding the Persian situation and if Persia and Soviet Russia can be brought to an interchange of views it is believed that peace between the two nations can be established. In any case M. Kraasin will have an opportunity of showing what part he will take in the success of his appeals to the Russian government will, perhaps, to a great degree, determine success of his trade plan. Unless Kraasin can show influence with his government, it is doubtful whether France will assume the important role which she was expected to assume in the re-establishment of business peace.

The Greek premier is expected in London Sunday, together with the delegates of Spain, France, Belgium, Brazil, Italy and Japan.

Eleven Tribunal Plans.

The Hague meeting is expected to develop into the most thorough and frank discussion of international courts in the world's history. This conference in Holland, which may last several months, has before it not less than eleven different projects for the establishment of an international court. The first, that presented by the United States to the preliminary peace conference; second, the Italian project; third, the plan of the Scandinavian countries; fourth, the proposal of the conference at The Hague in February of this year and those submitted separately by Sweden, Denmark, Norway, Switzerland, Germany, Austria and Holland.

Elihu Root's arrival in Holland has revived the possibility of his selection as president of this international commission, because of the leading part he has taken throughout his life in international work, but whether Root is selected or not it is certain his ideals will have great weight throughout the discussion if he carries out his ideas. This Hague meeting will lay the foundation for a world court modeled after the United States.

Problems Outlined. The league of nations secretariat today made public a long report of the meeting of the international commission, in which the difficulties confronting The Hague commission were pointed out, especially those arising from the two wide-

POLITICIANS' COUP MAKES MAYOR GASP

Daanville, Va., June 13.—Virginia politicians are chucking over the municipal election at Houston, the county seat of Halifax County, held this week.

W. L. Dodd was slated for reelection, apparently unopposed. Among those running for council was Dr. W. S. Lovelace. Mayor Dodd believed his selection assured.

But the returns told a different tale. A quiet campaign preceded the election. Thirty-one voters wrote in the name of Dr. Lovelace for mayor, and Dodd, receiving only seventeen votes, was declared defeated.

Friends of Dr. Lovelace say the physician had nothing to do with the "pussyfoot" development.
