

THE EVENING STAR. WASHINGTON, FRIDAY, APRIL 7, 1893. CROSBY & NOYES, Editor.

Disinterested voluntary laborers for the public welfare, like those proposed for itself by the Sanitary League would seem to deserve and would be expected to receive the unanimous endorsement of the people. But in truth, we're all poor creatures, and the reverse condition of fallen human nature invariably develop a few who cast obstacles in the way of every public movement, no matter how high and unselfish its aims.

This organized movement of citizens is now and has been from the beginning in perfect accord with the public sentiment. One of its original members and the chairman of an important committee is now the Commissioner in charge of the health department, which has been recently so gratifyingly active in sanitary work. Publications by and concerning the league have turned the attention of the citizens to sanitary matters in an extraordinary degree, and all over the city the people are becoming more and more interested in sanitary work.

Whether accidentally or as the result of a hastily-formed desire to be rid of self-made cares a life was ended last night many years after it should have terminated naturally. The flame of feeble origin that had grown steadily until it was a mercantile beacon of great magnitude, and that four years ago flashed up blood red to herald the community, steadily declined from that fatal fire evening, dwindled in latter days to a spark, smothered speedily for awhile and then, without warning, went out. With the darker side of Frank Ward's nature no one will now claim acquaintance, and it will properly be buried in the unexpected grave, but the lesson of his life and his fearful conclusion should be taught every boy who is old enough to have a realizing sense of personal responsibility.

No sooner is a campaign done than people are perplexed. To see the trouble and the fun preparing for the next.

"The tornado," said the artist, "is an example of the great force that may be found in a rough draft."

Evidence of a material increase of public interest as to local sanitary matters is found in the condemnation which is properly being poured out upon those who are alleged to be guilty of selling impure milk. No natural product is so sensitive to contaminating surroundings as the lactical fluid which to so many is an absolute necessity. The sorest penalties will not at the offense of selling adulterated milk. Then there is active opposition to the announced purpose of the ice companies as to the nondelivery of ice on Sunday.

The treatment of the American flag in Peru appears to have been very thoughtless indeed. South American states should be more careful lest they get into entanglements that will seriously interfere with their pastime of revolution.

The annexation of Hawaii would give California the first opportunity of her mighty career to tell her young men to go west and grow up with the country.

Mr. Olney is being very vigorously dured to knock a chip from some one's shoulder.

From the semi-explosive, semi-admiring tone of English newspaper comment on Mr. Phelps' pointed speech in the argument on a preliminary question in the Bering sea arbitration, it is inferred on this side of the water that he is doing very well indeed.

surprised to hear, in the ex-Senator's words, that "after futile and costly resistance, the drum-shop traffic has disappeared from the state." Surprised sales continue, club drinking and "joints" are not unknown, but the school has been closed since the legislature closed. He admits that in the large towns prohibition is not so strictly observed as in the rural districts, where public opinion is more rigid, but he is satisfied that in all localities the beneficent results are apparent in the diminution of crime, poverty and disorder. "Banned by law, the occupation is stigmatized and becomes disreputable. If the offender avoids punishment, he does not escape contempt." Mr. Ingalls' conclusions will be used as a text by temperance orators for some time to come. "Drinking in secret," says he, "temptation is diminished, and the weak are protected from their infirmities, and the young from their appetites, and the law wants to protect a man or two on the brilliant Kansas' prohibitory shield?"

In connection with the story as to the attack made by a Peruvian mob upon a subconsulate of the United States it has been said that in many cases where the natives assault the subconsulate the trouble is due, not to any antagonism to the country represented, but to prejudice and ill-will against the representative personally. The allegation continues to the effect that this is not an uncommon occurrence in South America or in other parts of the world where the acts of a mercantile consular agent are resented by the people who would respect the acts of a citizen of the United States duly appointed to the consular position. There should be no distinction merely because of a difference in rank or even in the nationality of the agent. Vice-consuls and consular agents represent this country just as much in the eyes of foreigners as do consuls, and they should be as solidly defended as an ambassador would be. The individual cuts no figure at all. It is the flag that has to be respected, no matter who or what it damages, in the process that may be necessary to compel proper conduct toward the stars and stripes and all that the tricolorated bunting shelters.

The creation of a title and billet for J. H. Soper is also announced. He is to be "commander of the forces of the United States." This would indicate that the gentlemen of the P. G. have become demoted from the mental strain of the times. A more veritable "chump" than Soper does not live in these islands, and every man in the executive council should be well aware of that fact. In our youth we had a little military training, and the opportunity for considerable military observation. We always supposed, in our ignorance, that before a man was qualified for the lofty position of commander of the forces, with the rank of colonel, he should be able to distinguish between "hay foot" and "straw foot." We have very recently learned better. How-land (Hawaii) is a very interesting observation. The above editorial may have been the result of earnest thought and honest conviction, but there is something in its style that must make the reader pause and consider the annexation question all over again. The style of journalism that the United States is gathering in is not an insignificant consideration, and Hawaii should not rely on the symmetry to be achieved by balancing the sensational journalism of New York with something in the way of rollicking personality in the extreme western section of the country.

Shooting stars. No sooner is a campaign done than people are perplexed. To see the trouble and the fun preparing for the next.

"Excuse me, Miss Spring," said the thermometer, "but do you think it is quite proper to drop such wintry weather in such a summary manner?"

"With so many labor troubles," said the clock upon the shelf, "I have just about concluded that I'd better strike myself."

In the long run there is no such tonic as the open air of spring. Any apparent feeling of languor or dizziness, it is the first symptom of recovery from duality. In most sicknesses when a man begins to feel lark, he is on the verge of recovery. The "extreme tired feeling" that comes with spring is not ill-health, it is convalescence from winter. Boston Globe.

The melancholy office seeker. Jim Jones, he was a candidate for office—so he was; He'd been workin' clean from daylight in the democratic cause; He'd heard about the salary an officer holder draws—

So he went in for an office in the mornin'! He brushed his old black beaver an' he polished up his boots; He got him twenty packages of Georgia-made cigarettes, An' they missed him from the village an' he little disreputable; For he went in for an office in the mornin'!

But the office wasn't crooked, an' they told him to wait; The road was kinder crooked when he thought it kinder straight; But Jones—he kept a-swingin' on the democratic gate; "For," said he, "I'll ketch the office in the mornin'!" Soon the Con-ressman had smoked up every one o' his caeteros; An' the mud had worn the polish from the leggin's of his boots; An' the office jes' got mixed up in political disputes! An' Jones—he kinder weakened in the mornin'! So he boarded of a freight train that was runnin' by the rule; For he didn't have a dollar, an' was feelin' like a fool; An' then he went to plowin' with a mortgage on his mule— An' he caused out every office in the mornin'!

An "unexplicable impulsion." One of the things which possess understanding is the wild desire of a man to throw up a $5,000 position in private life to assume a $1,500 clerkship under the government.—Chicago Dispatch.
