

THE EVENING STAR. WASHINGTON. MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1894. CROSBY S. NOYES, Editor. THE EVENING STAR has a regular and permanent circulation nearly double the combined circulation of the other Washington dailies.

President Cleveland suffers from un-sound advisers. His latest error—and so far as Washington is concerned, the most serious one—was the pardoning of John Shea, convicted of selling liquor without a license.

There is a protest going up in sporting circles against the proposition to take Corbett around the country as a base ball player. In some respects the suggestion is an impertinence to the people who like the game for its own sake.

It is hoped that the energetic sympathy which has been shown in behalf of the little green lizards now more or less popular as a decorative fad will not become so enthusiastic as to divert attention from the great numbers of suffering human beings in this and other countries.

Those who anticipate radical amendment of the Wilson tariff bill in the Senate are apt to be disappointed. That the republicans in the Senate may make a prolonged effort to delay action is possible, for at the northern end of the Capitol that vague yet potent something, designated "senatorial courtesy" triumphs over precedent and is superior to all rules, but the bill is quite likely to become law without any of its schedules being materially changed.

M. Pousset has just died in Paris, leaving an immense fortune, which he accumulated from the profits of the famous "brasseries," or beer-halls, of which he was the founder. His death disclosed that he was inspired by a notable and proper sentiment of gratitude toward those whose thirst had aided him in his acquisition of riches.

"With ever-increasing knowledge there seems to be no reason to doubt that man will eventually bring under his subjection all the adverse conditions of physical life and become the master of his environment."

Another claims the knight who came with a ring. To answer when I sang 'Oh, promise me.' I find my scepter scarcely laid away.
