THE HOUSE

It Saved Many Lives BY THE CABINET A Thorough Discussion of the Bland Signiorage Bill.

ONLY ONE MEMBER FAVORS IT

Big Pressure on the President to Veto the Measure. NO OPINION EXPRESSED. The much-discussed signiorage bill was again the subject of consideration by the President and his cabinet today. It is said that the President contented himself with listening attentively to what the different members of his official household had to say on the subject, and that he could be taken as making no indication of his proposed action on the bill. Secretary Smith is reported to be the only member of the cabinet favorable to the approval of the bill. The constitutional limit of ten days within which the President can act on the measure will expire on Thursday. Unless it is returned to Congress before that date, with or without his approval, it will become a law without action on his part. Although the Senate will not be in session until Monday, there is nothing to prevent the President from sending the bill back to the House today or tomorrow, provided that body is in session. There are good reasons for the belief that the President will take full time for the consideration of the matter and that he will not act one way or the other until after the next regular meeting of the cabinet on Tuesday next.
