Ten-one F. cor. 10th, entire bldg (Phone one-fifty.)

It is a significant fact, and you may draw your own conclusions—we have supplied nine-tenths of the debutantes of the season with their "coming-out" footwear. Participants of those events yet to take place and who have not yet ordered their footwear should take these facts into consideration. Surely, it is because we show the correct styles and a most comprehensive variety in evening slippers. Participants of State Dinners, approaching cotillions and the coming Charity Ball should see our magnificent styles, which will surely inspire the proper appreciation of the correctness of the footwear shown here.

Young men and ladies home from college should take advantage of the opportunity to be fitted with our special "College" shoes, which are purposely made for such wear, and which combine comfort and stylishness to a degree not attained by others. All leathers—great variety of styles.

Riding has become such a popular diversion and the demand for riding boots and leggins having increased, we have added several new styles to the already complete assortment. Every novelty which is adjudged "correct" by New York's leading whips is here.

DRUNKENNESS CURED BY ORRINE.

A harmless and sure remedy for the liquor habit. Can be given without the knowledge of the patient. If you have a relative or friend addicted to intoxicants, you can save him by giving him this wonderful remedy.

The Orrine Company, City.

Gentlemen: This is to let you know that your claims for Orrine, in my estimation, are fully justified. I bought three boxes of Orrine for a friend, who has been down two boxes only being used. The craving for liquor has entirely disappeared and my young friend is a cured man. The third box he gave to a friend, who has also been cured.

This remedy is, indeed, marvelous, and the whole world should know of it. You may publish the foregoing statement and I will be pleased to verify it to any one who may wish to see me.

BOY WAS NOT KIDNAPED.

Young Kerschner Made Up the Story as a Joke.

A dispatch from Bethlehem, Pa., last night says:

Stories of his kidnaping told by Charles Kerschner, thirteen year old, son of Oliver F. Kerschner, gardener for President Bobo, P. Lindebaum of the Bethlehem Steel Company, was exploded tonight by Bethlehem man, who took to the police Earle Bruch and Lillian Sharpe, Charles' schoolmates, who had seen him and conversed with him on New Year eve, when he was supposed to have been abducted.

"When these children confronted him he broke down quickly and admitted having 'made up' the story. Later he made a full confession. He said that he and his little brother had concocted the plan just to have a little excitement, and at the same time he wanted to stay out of school for New Year eve and not get a scolding for it. He got his little brother to raise the alarm that he was kidnaped.

When his brother ran screaming into the house he hurried down the alley and over the fence to the street. He then ran to town, where he talked to school friends and then boarded a trolley car for Allentown. He had not been chloroformed.

THE CUBAN CLAIMS

Estimates of Damages Much in Excess of Actual Loss.

RESPONSIBILITY ADMITTED BY SPAIN

Bonded Debt Caused by the Insurrection.

OBLIGATIONS OF THE JUNTA

Special Correspondence of The Evening Star.

HAVANA, December 29, 1900.

Cuban claims are becoming a cloud on the horizon. Much confusion exists regarding their nature, and this confusion grows. Some of the claims when analyzed and understood are reduced to a speck. Others still cloud the future.

Broadly speaking, the claims may be divided into two sorts—those of American citizens and those of the citizens or subjects of other countries. Both classes are receiving much quiet discussion among the members of the constitutional convention and also on the part of American officials and the consular representatives of foreign nations. With reference to American citizens a fairly clear understanding exists. The claims under article VII of the treaty of Paris amount to $50,000,000 on paper. As usual in filing claims the estimate of damages suffered has been excessive, made so on the theory that the amounts will be scaled down when the claims are ready to pass upon them. Article VII provides for the mutual relinquishment on the part of Spain and the United States of claims against each other for damages suffered from the beginning of the insurrection up to the time of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty. This covers the period from February 24, 1895, until April 11, 1898. All other claims have a standing or a lack of standing by themselves.

The first class, as he is most in evidence, usually is a ruined sugar planter. He promises to become as famous as McGarraghan or other historic individuals, who in one grand gesture have tried to collect claims against the United States. This Cuban claimant as he is seen in the present, is a man who is daily greeting in an inquiry as to when the American Congress is going to act and when he will receive his money. It is a dispiriting task to the possible task of legislation during the short session makes doubtful the passage of the bill recommended by President McKinley for a commission to adjudicate these claims, and furthermore, that even after legislation is secured, a long period must elapse before the claims can be properly considered. After this will come the appropriation from Congress.

Claims of Americans.

Besides the claims for damages to property some American citizens have demands for personal injury sustained either at the hands of the insurrection or the direction of the Spanish military authorities. As to the Spanish authorities, the claims are usually for loss of personal liberty, since during Weyler's time the Spanish officials were very particular when they took prisoner. There was ground for suspicion. This applies also to the filibusters.

Probably a majority of the American citizens who are entitled to indemnity under article VII of the treaty of Paris are native born Cubans, who became naturalized in the United States chiefly with a view of protecting their property interests in the island. These have the best cases of damage on paper, because they are not only looking forward to the certainty of Spain's inability to maintain her power, they are careful at every point to keep their own status established. They not only made sure of their registry at the American consulates, but they also gathered in the evidence of their loss and loss which they suffered. They will be able to make out almost a perfect case. It is claims of this kind that the lawyers have been most anxious to secure. One man said to have in his hands claims aggregating $5,000,000, chiefly of naturalized Cubans.

Claims of Foreigners.

Citizens or subjects of foreign powers other than the United States who suffered during the insurrection are not in so good a position as American citizens. While the reclamations said to have been made by various foreign governments on the Washington administration are not fully understood in Cuba, the Spanish officials might arise the late Senator Cushman K. Davis to advise a direct course. As a member of the Paris peace commission, he saw the possible entanglement, and, perhaps, coercion of Cuba if the matter were left open after the new government was set up. So he advised meeting the issue squarely by a specific declaration, either in the Cuban constitution, or on the part of the American Congress, when it came to pass on the constitution. He was considering this subject when he died with fatal illness, and though he had not made up his mind as to the exact line of action, he was very positive in his advice that the issue should be met openly, and if necessary, defiantly at the start.

Incidental to this question of the Spanish claims is another matter, that of the 1,000,000 paper currency, issued during Weyler's time, and known as "Weyler's scrip." It has other legs to stand on than the recognition of the indebtedness, but if this indebtedness should be recognized the speculators who hold the scrip undoubtedly would make the place as handsome as a Cuban liability, and probably they could establish their case before an international tribunal. For the paper currency was issued by the order of the war cabinet of Spain. The issue was made through the Spanish bank of the island of Cuba, which had a semi-official relation to the Cuban government. The currency went the way of all war currencies, and though it had an alleged silver reserve of one-third of its face value and a supplementary gold reserve, public confidence in it weakened. Toward the end of Spanish sovereignty, even before the destruction of the name, its circulation was very restricted. Three dollars in Weyler's scrip were needed in order to buy the equivalent of one dollar in Spanish gold.

Liability for the Weyler Scrip.

After the American occupation the speculators bought the scrip and a movement was concerted to force payment on the part of the Spanish bank through the medium of the courts. The bank denied its liability and an arrangement was made by which court proceedings were not pressed. However, the question was not determined by any authoritative tribunal, and may be said to be in suspense at this time. Besides the alleged liability of the bank, the speculators had a faint hope of their ability to have the Weyler scrip redeemed by the Spanish government. But back of this is the possibility of getting it counted in with the liabilities of the Cuban government. While none of these circumstances encourage investment in the scrip, bunched together, there is enough to make the basis of speculation. The scrip is a very restricted obligation, and the Weyler scrip has a speculative value and is still quoted at 7 to 8 cents per dollar.

Bonds Issued by the Junta.

It has been assumed that the recognition of the claims of the Cuban revolution was a matter entirely within the province of the constitutional convention or of the government which may be set up in pursuance of its action. This covers the payment of the insurgent troops, as well as the alleged Cuban bonds and other obligations which the constitutional convention or government has undertaken. Probably if the American public should be started with a prospective Cuban debt of $100,000,000 in settlement of these obligations a new view would be taken of the subject. However, one of the Cuban leaders who was familiar with all the obligations and promises, and who has access to the pay rolls of the insurgents, insists that instead of $80,000,000, which is the current rumor, at least outside there will be $200,000,000. The estimate was $150,000,000.

having authority commensurate with the responsibility which it would have to assume.

Advice of Senator Davis.

The present tendency of the Cubans is to run away from the question, because it is perplexing, or else to leave it in suspense. The knowledge of the complications which might arise led the late Senator Cushman K. Davis to advise a direct course. As a member of the Paris peace commission, he saw the possible entanglement, and, perhaps, coercion of Cuba if the matter were left open after the new government was set up. Railroad Employees Being Taught the Value of Economy.

From the Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Milwaukee employees of the Northwestern road have been asked to save the stubs of their lead pencils. A short time ago the purchasing agent of the road, Charles Hayward, assumed charge of the supply department, replacing Edward Osgood, who had been the supply man for about ten years. Immediately upon assuming charge Mr. Hayward began to work out his plan of reform. He appointed an inspector, and after consultation with the superintendents of the Galena and Wisconsin divisions, W. E. Morse and T. A. Lawson, respectively, he decided to introduce the service of the "economy special." Then he sent circulars to all agents on the two divisions urging greater economy. The inspector started out with a lot of pencil holders, which he distributed as a means for getting the good out of pencil stubs too short to be wielded effectively.

It is estimated that every year $500 worth of pencil stubs are thrown away by the employees who have occasion to use the figure. Too many pen points, too, the supply man gave out, were discarded before their usefulness had fully passed. He told the employees that instead of throwing away pen points when they became weak they would be expected to revitalize them by heating them with lighted matches. He ordered shopmen to clean their engine cleaners to return their used waste to general headquarters instead of throwing it away. The old waste now is cleaned by a process and returned for further use. The inspector now issues limited amounts of Waste, enough to meet requirements, but not enough to warrant a reckless and extravagant application of it.

The reform has opened another business to the Vanderbilts and other owners of the road. It provides for the return of all ink-stained impression cloths used in offices. These cloths, a very great number of which are used annually, are collected by the chief of the "economy special," carried back to the city, sacked and sold for old rags. Furthermore, to make the surplus showings more gratifying to the stockholders, the supply agent has ordered that every lamp wick be used until there is not enough of it left to connect with the oil in the bowl. They pins have been provided for the lamp users to keep the short pieces of wick in position for continued service.

Trainmen have been ordered to practice more marked economy. They have been given to understand that links, pins, lantern globes, lard oil, flags, torches, torpedoes and other things in common use are valuable, and that they are expected to be as careful with them as they can be.

The inspector takes the "economy special" out over sixty days, visiting all places on the two divisions.
