A COSTLY PRIVILEGE

Earl Russell's Trial Provokes Hostile Comment in England.

CUSTOM LIKELY TO BE ABOLISHED

Relic of the Time of Jealousy Between Classes.

LONDON NEWS AND GOSSIP

Special Correspondence of The Evening Star.

LONDON, July 3, 1901.

The trial of Earl Russell by his peers on the charge of bigamy will commence on July 18. The court will be set up, as at present arranged, in the Royal Gallery, in the hall in the parliament houses at Westminster, which is decorated with frescoes representing the crowning incidents in the careers of Nelson and Wellington. Such a trial is a curious complement of a new century, a new parliament and a new reign. But lovers of sensations, at all events, have nothing to complain of.

"Guilty, on my honor," or "Not guilty, on my honor," according as the result goes, will be the formula in which the peers will pronounce their verdict. Each peer delivers his verdict separately by word of mouth, and this is a most solemn and imposing part of the trial. The whole body of peers practically constitutes the jury, and the lord high steward is the judge who presides over the trial. He has to be specially appointed for this purpose, and not the lord steward of the household, who is a permanent state official. The temporary character of the office will be signified at the close of the trial, when the official question will solemnly break his wand of office to show that his functions have come to an end. In the course of a few days the king will appoint a lord high steward for the trial to which every peer of the realm has been summoned by the lord chancellor. All the judges have to be specially appointed. The preparations are out of all proportion to the magnitude of the offense, and the cost will undoubtedly be very great. It will not be surprising if the impending trial is the last of its kind. The feeling is finding expression that this form of privilege, except in the case of high treason or a capital charge, should be swept away. It is a relic of bygone times, and not even the peers themselves would object to surrender their rights in this respect.

Picturesque as the trial may be from some points of view, it certainly is an anachronism. It dates from a time when great prejudices existed between the order of society and when the law had resulted inevitably in an adverse verdict for a peer to be tried by the common people. But it is hardly nowadays to make distinctions of this kind. No doubt when the Americans really run England, as I see is predicted in the papers at home, such privileges as this will be done away with.

Consent to Catholicism.

It is certainly a sign of the times that so great a concession has been made to Roman Catholicism as is indicated by the suggested alterations in the oath which the King of England takes upon his accession to the throne. If the changes be accepted the next king will not be obliged to offend his Roman Catholic subjects by calling them "heretics."

The recommendations of the committee on the subject have been generally favorably received, but the militant Protestants object to the proposed wording, which, in their opinion, does not go far enough in condemnation of Roman Catholic practices by a Protestant king. One passage, for instance, of the proposed oath, which makes the king declare that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary and any other saint and the sacrifice of the mass are not to be used in his realm, is regarded as "heretical" by the Protestants. "But this expression of opinion does not convey--so some of the critics contend--any real expression of personal repudiation of these particular practices."

It has been a burning question in this Protestant country ever since the death of the king, when the necessity for taking the oath arose, and the Irish members of parliament have been most violent about it.

Legislators Taking Life Easy.

Life in parliament is not taken very easily. I went up to the house to see a member yesterday and found him not in his seat, but on the terrace that overlooks the Thames, enjoying tea with a number of ladies. He was not alone in his devotion to England's "5 o'clock gods."

Though there were 400 members within the precincts of parliament, it was only on very rare occasions that a majority of them had either time or inclination to visit the legislative chamber. The members find that the strawberry season produces this result. The advent of the luscious fruit seems to bring hosts of charming ladies, and to induce a course of tedious visits. In evidence, the average member has no time to bestow on the technical details of national expenditure, and all events if he has any partiality for legislative work, he is not allowed to gratify the whim. He is simply monopolized by the ladies, and the members who are not so liberal that during hours of debate members are driven to amuse themselves behind long cigars. They read, play chess, tell stories, converse with friends, and frequently drink more than the nature of their work renders necessary or desirable. Being aware of these weaknesses, the ladies naturally expect a share of the spoils. That this is fully accorded to them is obvious to every beholder.

Whitefriars Club Pilgrimage.

The Whitefriars Club made a little pilgrimage to Wexsex on Saturday which would have delighted the hearts of American admirers of Thomas Hardy. This club is a coterie of literary men in London, and each Friday night in the winter months they meet and dine and smoke together. Among the members are Mark Twain, George Meredith, Anthony Hope, Carruthers Gould, Richard White, Gilbert Parker, Max Pemberton, Thomas Hardy and others. In the summer months, with their wives and friends, they make excursions into the country, and then follow round White's Selborne, or to have tea with George Meredith, down at Box Hill.

On Saturday the women and Mrs. Dorsetshire, and drove over the swelling uplands and across the dairy meads of the countryside made famous by Thomas Hardy. ASKS FOR REDUCED RATE.

Committee Planning for Large Attendance at Buffalo, September 3.

The committee on arrangements for the observance of District day at the Pan-American exposition has made formal application for a reduced rate in the round fare from Washington to Buffalo, and that tickets be placed on sale at least three days preceding September 3, which has been decided upon as District day. From the number of inquiries received by the committee the indications are, even at this early date, that the attendance from the national capital will be large and representative.

The assistant secretary of the committee, with headquarters in the Bond building, in rooms 204 and 205, has received a complete list of the hotels and boarding houses in Buffalo, with their rates, location and accessibility with reference to the exposition grounds. The demand for this information has been steady and will be furnished upon application at the office of the assistant secretary.

The committee has received many congratulations upon its happy choice of September 3 as District day at the exposition. The employees of the government departments will find the date particularly advantageous inasmuch as they will derive the benefit of the two full holidays immediately preceding.

The program, as already announced, will be one of simplicity and dignity, consisting of addresses by the president and director general of the exposition, a reception by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner" and an address on behalf of the District of Columbia by the president of the Board of Commissioners. Mr. H. B. F. Macfarland, a great deal of interest will center in the Marine Band, which by the direction of the national authorities, will be at the disposal of the District committee for the entire day and evening.

MODERN OFFICE BUILDING. Construction to be begun soon by the Messrs. Tyssowski.

In the course of the next few days a beginning is to be made in the removal of the building at the northeast corner of 15th and G streets northwest. On this site is to be erected a fine, modern, fireproof office structure, which will be nine stories in height. The owners of the property, the Messrs. Tyssowski, decided on making this improvement, as stated in The Star some time ago, and now the arrangements having been completed through Westcott & Story, real estate brokers, the work will be pushed ahead.

According to the design prepared by J. H. de Sibour, architect, of New York City, the Boer resistance to an end.

Boer resistance to an end. It would be the cheapest policy, both as regards blood and treasure. The only reason given for Lord Kitchener's refusal is that he has a coup to bring off soon that will surprise both the Boers and the British. It would be a military friend who firmly believes in Kitchener that this is the case.

Amateur Men-of-Wars Men.

The interesting fact has already leaked out that Mr. Yerburch, M. P., and Mr. Arnold White have been spending the last few weeks as amateur bluejackets on a British man-of-war, in the Mediterranean. The only reason given for Lord Kitchener's refusal is that he has a coup to bring off soon that will surprise both the Boers and the British. It would be a military friend who firmly believes in Kitchener that this is the case.

Visitors From Abroad.

Whatever is brightest in London just now is provided by French and American visitors. Paris, impossible in July, sends to London her best people, or many of them, who give Sara Bernhardt her season. America, for more general reasons of sightseeing, fills the big hotels, and the female representatives of the two nations in this season of war and court mourning afford what is bright and agreeable. It is the Americans and French again who have almost united in the London coaching season from despair and bankruptcy.

Gloom Over the Boer War.

The feeling of the city as to the long duration of the war is extremely gloomy. It is impossible to talk with the representatives of any great financial house, or any of the leading members of the stock exchange, without discovering how weary, sick and discouraged they are. The managers to be disappointed the money world is at its summit. In a conversation I had the other day with a gentleman who knows the banking world well he remarked that the city has made up its mind to the war running on for another year, if it is not brought to an end by August.
