Stein's, in Plenty at Stein's.

Stein's new furniture establishment was opened about a month ago. This has been a month of reputation making. We've laid down our policy to undersell. We've demonstrated our ability and our determination to underquote throughout the furniture line. On opening day Stein sold Tables for 5c. and Tabourettes for 9c. People crowded for them. The demand was more than the supply, and we promised to get more if possible. They're here. Each will sell for 5 cents tomorrow—but in order to place them best they will be sold at these prices only to those purchasing some other piece of furniture.

50c. Tabourettes & Tables, 5 cts.

LONDON NEWS AND GOSSIP

Special Correspondence of The Evening Star.

LONDON, October 18, 1901. Among the foreign potentates who will be invited by King Edward VII to attend his coronation next June is the new Ameer of Afghanistan. Lord Curzon, who will be present at the great ceremony, will offer the hospitality of his majesty to the Ameer, and if the state of his kingdom permits of his absence for a period of a few days, the Ameer would absorb the viceregal of India may be relied upon to use every endeavor to induce the Afghan monarch to accept the invitation. It is hardly likely, however, that Habibullah Khan will come over, for though there is at present no sign of trouble in his kingdom, he may follow the precedent set by the late Ameer when he was invited by Queen Victoria to visit London. On that occasion Abdurrahman Khan not only did not think it advisable to quit his country, but he deemed it necessary that his eldest son—the present Ameer—should also remain at Kabul. His second son—Nasrullah Khan—was deputed to represent the Ameer, and some such course will probably be adopted on the occasion of the coronation.

A number of princely guests from India are expected next year. One of them has already arrived in London, but the interval will be devoted to a tour of the western hemisphere, upon which he set forth today. This particular prince has caused much speculation in London as to his identity. He registered at a hotel under the name of Mr. Ranjit, director. The solution, however, is very simple. He is Prince Ranjit, the Rajah of Bahawalpur. He comes with a large retinue of servants, and also is accompanied by a band of native musicians, and a private dancing troupe. He has before his royal master several times each day. As he has left for Montreal and New York, you will doubtless see him at the coronation.

Non-Conformists Stirred Up.

The coming coronation is exciting some stir in extreme Protestant circles, and a strong desire is expressed that the chief of the non-conformist ministers should be present at the ceremonial. This is the more desired because it is understood that the Roman Catholics, who did not attend the funeral of her late majesty, will be present at the coronation. Though Roman Catholics were not officially represented at the funeral, the pope sent the cardinal legate to congratulate King Edward on his accession, and a papal representative was also present at the jubilee of Queen Victoria. Extreme Protestants are also greatly perturbed at the incoming of Jesuit monks and nuns from France. The great Jesuit establishments at St. Omer has been closed, and its occupants are for the most part coming to England, while hundreds of monks and nuns have already arrived. Meetings of Protestants and Catholics are being held, but it is not yet decided what steps will be taken.

There is no truth in the report that the king is taking little or no interest in the preparations for the coronation. His majesty is not only showing the same interest in this as in other court festivities, but in regard to the coronation he is most exacting and no detail is allowed to escape his notice. In special circles every detail of the forthcoming festivities is still being keenly discussed, while already many processes are arranging for their furs and velvet to be sent over to have the pile raised and the ravages of time repaired.

Interesting London Relic.

Stepney Church, known as St. Dunstan's, which has been practically destroyed by fire, was one of the forgotten relics of old London. It was quite out of the beaten track of tourists, and the citizen must have been an enthusiastic antiquarian to journey to the now squalid district, but which in Saxon times was the lovely manor of Stibbe Heath, or Stibbith, from which the modern name Stepney is derived. Yet there are few churches in the metropolis which possess more interesting or ancient records than St. Dunstan's. In the archives is evidence that in the fourteenth century the bishops of London, who had a palace here, were buried there, so did John de Pultney, who has, in one respect, a better claim to fame than Dick Whittington, for he was four times lord mayor, whereas the latter worthy was only thrice elected to the civic dignity.

London is not so rich in ecclesiastical architecture as she can afford to lose any of her ancient parish churches. There are but few now remaining that escaped the ravages of the great fire of 1666. The most interesting of them are St. Dunstan's, founded in 1123 by Rabere, a "fellow of infinite jest," who, after wearing of the cap and mitre of a bishop, was a humorist, repented of his frivolities and went on pilgrimage to Rome, where he dreamed a dream which prompted him to build the church and the hospital at Smithfield. Another is St. Saviour's, Southwark, hard by London bridge, which the poet Gower, Chaucer's successor, had found, and which, in the times of the great Elizabeth, was the church frequented by dramatists and actors of the historic theaters, the Rose, the Globe and the Blackfriars. St. Saviour's most beautiful memorial is the tomb of Gower.

St. Dunstan's escaped the great fire of 1666. The chancel, remarkable for its fine stained glass windows and beautiful woodcarving (much of it the work of the Gibbons), is now a heap of charred ruins. Fortunately the church registers have escaped the flames, as also have some of the mediaeval brasses and sculpture. For those who go down to sea in ships St. Dunstan's, Stepney, has a special interest from the fact that all persons born upon the high seas can claim to be entered on its list of parishioners. The church was built in 1484, on the site of an original structure dedicated to St. Dunstan (90). Like most of the English fine old parish churches, it suffered terribly from the paint and plaster vandalism of the early Georgian period. Tons of stucco and whitewash were recently scraped from its walls and columns, and the beauty of its woodwork restored by the removal of the coats of paint, with which church wardens of former generations had hidden it.

New Transit Development.

Coronation year promises to witness great traveling developments in the metropolis. The construction of tube railways was arrested last session by the inquiry of the select committee, but now that a report on the subject has been presented schemes for supplying various districts have been considered, and will be submitted to parliament next year. They are estimated to cost at least fifty millions. What effect they will have upon the congested state of London's streets remains to be seen, but so far as the Central Tube railway is concerned, though it carried an enormous number of passengers, it does not seem to have reduced the pedestrian traffic in the slightest degree.

Electric tramway schemes will also be to the fore next session. Parliament is to be asked to sanction the construction of fifty miles of electric tram roads, and it is understood that the trolley system will not be generally proposed. The author of the plan is not in favor of the system. Some other method will be proposed, especially in the suburbs, but in the country districts, it is not open to any objection as in the crowded streets. A suggestion has been made that shallow tramway tubes should be constructed under the main streets in the metropolis, but the difficulties to be encountered are so great, and the expense would be so enormous that there is little likelihood that it will meet with acceptance.

Municipal Theater Agitation.

The Municipal Theater, for which Sir Evelyn has so long signed, is at length obtaining light on the notice of the London county council. On Tuesday the council had under its consideration a com-
