WAYNE MACVEAGH SAID

the same amount to the Wilson fund, suggested Senator Pomerene.

"No, I probably said I was willing to give the same amount, or that I was equally interested in the Wilson campaign," answered Mr. Crane.

"I just wanted to have one progressive succeed," said Mr. Crane. "I didn't care which one it was."

He said he began with Senator La Follette and then gave to Gov. Wilson "when he came along," because he believed him also a progressive.

"For whom was Mr. Hoover asking a contribution when he came to you?" asked Senator Pomerene.

"Why, suppose for the campaign of Col. Roosevelt."

"Can you tell us whether you would have been criticized this way if you had given a contribution to Mr. Hoover?"

"I might have been run in for monopoly," laughed Mr. Crane.

He was asked if he wanted to make any further statement. He said he had been attacked "throughout the west" during this campaign for the nomination of La Follette. He had no connection with the organization, he said.

In a written statement Mr. Crane gave out to newspaper men in the committee room he said:

"My contribution to the Wilson fund was made after it had become apparent that La Follette probably could not be nominated and elected President."

"I am very well supported both by Wilson and La Follette, both being in the progressive camp."

"I was contributing to both the Wilson and La Follette funds was known to the managers of the two campaigns. I made no secret of the fact."

Russell Gives Welliver as Authority.

Charles Edward Russell, socialist candidate for Governor of New York, took the stand.

Mr. Russell said that he had read a report of one of his speeches appearing in a New York paper, describing a telephone interview purporting to be between J. P. Morgan and the White House during the 1904 campaign.

Mr. Morgan was asked for one hundred thousand-dollar contribution to the republican campaign fund.

The incident purporting to have occurred shortly before election. The article stated that Wayne MacVeagh was calling on J. P. Morgan at his office.

When their conversation was interrupted by a telephone call for Morgan. When Mr. Morgan returned to the office, he said, "What do you think that maniac at Washington wants me to do? He wants me to give $100,000 to his campaign fund."

Mr. Russell said that the story came to him in 1910 by a magazine representative who had called on Wayne MacVeagh and who told Mr. Russell that he had the story from Mr. MacVeagh.

Mr. Russell said that his informant was a reputable journalist and asked that he be not pressed for the name, as it might injure the magazine representative in his employment.

After some debate the committee insisted on an answer and Mr. Russell said the writer was Judson C. Welliver.

Mr. Russell said that he had never made the charge that Col. Roosevelt had demanded money from Morgan.

"It might have been Mr. Cortelyou or Mr. Bliss who was said to have talked to Morgan on the telephone," said the witness.

Welliver Gives His Version.

Judson C. Welliver, who was working as a newspaperman at the reporters' table, was called to the stand.

He said Wayne MacVeagh had asked him in September, 1910, to call on him at Bryn Mawr, Pa., to talk about Col. Roosevelt.

The invitation resulted from an article on Col. Roosevelt, previously written by Mr. Welliver.

The incident related by Mr. Russell, he said, came up during the long interview at Bryn Mawr. Welliver recalled the conversation, Mr. MacVeagh said he had been in Mr. Morgan's private office one day in October of 1910.

Mr. Welliver said Mr. MacVeagh told him Mr. Morgan had been called to the telephone. That the secretary informed him it was E. J. Harriman who wished to speak to him. When Mr. Morgan returned, said MacVeagh, he seemed displeased with the telephone conversation, and said:

"What do you suppose that man in the White House wants?" he asked. Harriman has gone off down there to Washington and dined with him and now he comes back and asks me to call on him. He wants him to raise more campaign funds. He has given $50,000 and now he wants me to give $100,000."

Mr. Welliver said that according to the witness, told him by Mr. Morgan wrote a check for $50,000, which he sent to Mr. Harriman.

Mr. Welliver said he could not recall whether Mr. MacVeagh used the word "demanded" in connection with his reference to President Roosevelt.

"You are sure the name of Mr. Harriman was given as that of the man who asked to have the money raised?" asked Senator Pomerene.

"Yes, I am sure of that," said Mr. Welliver.

The committee took a recess at the end of Mr. Welliver's testimony until 1:30 o'clock.

COMMITTEE INFORMED OF LA FOLLETTE'S FUND

Campaign for the Presidential Nomination Cost $63,961.56.

An account of the receipts and expenses of the campaign of Senator Robert M. La Follette for the republican presidential nomination was filed with the Senate campaign contributions committee today by John J. Hannan, Senator La Follette's secretary.

The accounts show that the senator collected $63,961.56 and spent $63,961.56 in the campaign.

Charles R. Crane of Chicago, who has been charged with contributing to both the La Follette and Wilson funds, is the largest contributor listed in the La Follette statement. He is credited with $23,500 given in several installments extending over the period from December 14, 1911, to June 17, 1912.

Gifford Pinchot, the former chief of the United States Forest Service, contributed $10,000. Alfred S. Baker gave $2,000, Rudolph Spreckels $3,000, William Flinn of Pennsylvania $1,000 and Senator La Follette himself $1,500.

The account contains entries of $10,000 loans, one of $1,000 by Medill McCormick and one of $500 by Senator Gronna of North Dakota. Both of these loans were marked "repaid."

The account of disbursements shows that $10,817.05 was paid in salaries in the Washington headquarters of the La Follette campaign. The Chicago headquarters spent $10,450. La Follette expenses at the republican national convention were $1,000. The Chicago headquarters conference held in Chicago last October cost the La Follette managers $633.75.

Mr. Hannan enters $7.88 as the balance in bank.

EXAGGERATION IN ART.

By Dr. Frank Crane.

The artist is not only to be true to nature, he must be more than true. He is to bring out clearly what nature expresses confusedly. He is to interpret life. Hence he is to magnify and emphasize certain truths of life.

If he depicts life precisely as it is he has no meaning. He is as obscure as life itself. It is a mere copyist. We get nothing from him we cannot better get from life at first hand.

In all great works of art you perceive this magnifying trait.

In Homer, the first and in many respects the greatest piece of literary art, everything is exaggerated. The men are huge in size, beautiful as gods and strong as lions. "If they eat," says Charles Albert, "it is whole heaves and entire sheep. If they sleep the sand all about them is wet with their tears."

When the Homeric army marches "it rolls," says the "Iliad," "over the earth as a conflagration, and the ground below as when Jupiter the Thunderer smites it with a bolt."

MUST KEEP DEBTS DOWN

Annapolis "Middies" Called on for Statements as to What They Owe.

Special Dispatch to The Star. ANNAPOLIS, Md., October 7.—It is evidently the purpose of Capt. John H. Gibbons, superintendent of the Naval Academy, to keep midshipmen from getting into debt to any extent.

It has been learned here that Capt. Gibbons has called on midshipmen to render sworn statements at once as to their outstanding indebtedness. This is in line with the custom instituted by him a year ago.

It is a well known fact that in recent years many of the middies have gone largely into debt in connection with premature orders for uniforms and other wearing apparel. What amount of debts the authorities would permit the middies to assume is not known. It is said, however, that none of the students will be permitted to contract debts amounting to more than $20.

Milling Plant Damaged.

LYNCHBURG, Va., October 7.—The boiler room of the Lynchburg Milling Company was damaged by fire yesterday morning to the extent of several hundred dollars. Good work of the fire department prevented spread of the flames. The mill property was not damaged by the blaze.

It pays to read the want columns of The Star. Hundreds of situations are filed through them.
